In Pursuit of Chief Joseph.

General Miles Relates a Chapter from His Experience as An Indian Fighter.

A HURRIED MARCH FROM THE YELLOWSTONE TO THE MISSOURI.

BY GENERAL NELSON A. MILES.

(This paper will form part of a book about to be published by General Miles, entitled "From New England to the Golden Gate.")

In the summer of 1877 information was received through unofficial reports and newspaper accounts of threatened hostilities on the part of the Nez Perce Indians in Idaho.

The Nez Perce Indians had lived from time immemorial in Idaho; and up to that time it had been their habit to roam the Perce had ever taken the life of a white man, though it could not be said that no white man had ever killed a Nez Perce. From our first acquaintance with them through the expedition of Lewis and Clark they had been exceedingly friendly to white explorers and settlers; yet the old story of a desire on the part of the white people to occupy Indian land caused the serious trouble that occurred during that year, followed by the usual result. They were occupants of the Yellowstone valley. By treaty this land was given to the Indians as part of their reservation, and they were opposed to the surrender of it. They were in comfortable circumstances, having herds of cattle and plenty of horses. A determined effort was made by interested whites to make them surrender the contested ground, and the prominent chiefs, including Looking Glass and Chief Joseph, opposed it.

Chief Joseph told me afterward that his father, before his death, called him to his bedside and counseled him never to sign a treaty giving up the Yellowstone valley.

Chief Joseph and others had gone into the hills and mountains, gathering up their stock with a view to removing it at the very time a disaffected element took advantage of the conditions of affairs to precipitate hostilities. One young man whose brother had been killed the year before by a white man went out and brought his horse into the camp, where he sat upon the stolen horse, stroking his mane, he said: "You will now have to go to war, as I have commenced it by killing the man who killed my brother. Troops will be sent against all of you."

This act did, in fact, start hostilities, as it created intense excitement and feeling against them on the part of the people, and troops were sent to arrest depredations and hostilities. Then commenced some sharp fighting by troops under General Howard, the Indians retreating east over the mountains, up what is known as the Solo trail and Clarke's fork of the Columbia, thence east through what is known as Big Hole Basin, where they were overtaken by the command of General Gibbon. Then a sharp and desperate fight occurred, in which General Gibbon was wounded and his attack repelled. The Indians, however, retreated and were followed by General Howard's command through Yellowstone Park and out to reach the Fork pass, a tributary of the Yellowstone. They came near intercepting General Sherman in his tour through the Yellowstone park.

From the unofficial reports and newspaper accounts, I judged that the Indians would, should they evade the troops in western Montana, endeavor to reach the Judith Basin, and, if pursued, would move north of the Missouri river. Being in command of the district of the Yellowstone, with headquarters at Fort Keogh, I sent, August 20, Montana, I ordered (August 20) Fort Lieutenant G. C. Doane, second cavalry, with company E, seventh cavalry, and the Crow all to the Missouri at and west of the Musselshell, with instructions to "intercept, capture or destroy the Nez Perce." On the 10th of August, to the same end, I sent Colonel Sturgis, colonel seventh United States cavalry, with six companies of his regiment, to Judith Gap, where they subsequently passed at the same time ordering Lieutenant Doane then en route under instructions above cited to report to him. Such general instructions were furnished as had rendered practicable were furnished General Sturgis, and he was directed to act upon the information he might obtain. His movements were timely and well made. Unfortunately he was deceived as to the movements of the Indians on Clarke's fork, but subsequently pursued them with vigor to near Judith Gap. As the disposition of troops anticipated the orders subsequently received from division and department headquarters, and as there were at that time reports of the Indians worthy of a southward movement of Sitting Bull and his following, no further dispositions to pursue the Nez Perce were made. General Sturgis was directed to keep me informed of the movements of the Indians, which he did by subsequent reports. After General C. O. Howard's command joined that of General Sturgis, General Howard assumed command of the latter.

The information that I had received, both official and unofficial, of the movements of the troops and also of the Nez Perce Indians, gave me great anxiety, and on the evening of the 17th of September, standing on the right bank of the Yellowstone river and looking toward the west, I noticed a dark object moving along the high brakes of the western horizon which as it gradually came nearer proved to be a single man. He turned down the trail nearly opposite to where I was standing, and as he wound his way along down the steep bluffs, I observed that he was a cavalryman, possibly a bearer of dispatches. He came to the ferry on the opposite side, the boatman ferried him over, and he rode up to me, dismounted and saluted me. I recognized him as one of the cavalrymen from General Sturgis's command. So anxious was I to be satisfied of the result of the operation taking place some two hundred miles to the west that the first question I asked him was, "Have you had a fight?"

"No," he replied; "but we have had a good chance," alluding to an adroit maneuver that Looking Glass and Chief Joseph had made when they effected the escape of the Nez Perce.

Troops Left Helplessly in the Rear. On opening the envelope which he handed me I found a report from Colonel Sturgis and a letter from General Howard, stating that the Nez Perce had left them hopelessly in the rear, and wishing I would take some action to intercept them.

My command was then 20 miles east of where they had crossed the Yellowstone, and this report was five days old. I determined to make the best effort possible to find them, however, and at once gave orders for what available troops I had to be made ready, supplied, and ferried over the river to the north side. All night long the troops were kept busy, and the next morning the troops were on the left bank of the Yellowstone, equipped with thirty days' supplies, abundance of ammunition, wagon trains, pack trains, artillery, scouts, Indian guides and everything that could be made available for a long and difficult forced march and if necessary a desperate encounter.

Anticipating that the Indians would move toward the upper Missouri, and that the commands of General Howard and Colonel Sturgis would need supplies, I started couriers for Fort Buford and Fort Peck on the Missouri river, over one hundred miles away, with requests for a steamer load of supplies for both men and animals to be sent up the Missouri river to supply their wants. These messages went through all right and the steamer that was loaded at Fort Buford reached a place called Cow Island, some three hundred miles by river to the west, in time to supply General Howard's command, both men and animals, for thirty days, when it arrived on the Missouri river out of supplies.

The following morning, September 18th, at daylight my command slowly moved away up the trail from the Yellowstone to the high mesa on the north side of that river; and then commenced a most laborious and tedious march of approximately two hundred miles. My command consisted of a small detachment of white guides and scouts and thirty Cheyenne and other Indian allies, under the command of Lieutenant M. P. Maus, first United States Infantry; a battalion of the Fifth Infantry, mounted on the captured Sioux ponies, Sturgis's, Bennett's, Carter's and Robey's companies, Captain Simon Snyder commanding; a battalion of the Second United States cavalry, Tyler's, Jerome's and McClelland's companies, Captain George L. Tyler commanding; one breech loading Hotchkiss gun, Sergeant McHugh, Fifth Infantry, commanding, and the train escort, commanded by Captain D. B. Brotherton, Fifth Infantry, consisting of company K and a detachment of company D, Fifth Infantry, with one 12-pounder Napoleon gun. From information received and the direction taken by the scouts, the indications were that they intended to join the hostile Sioux, north of the Canadian line. In order to intercept them if possible or, if not, to take up the trail and pursue them, I moved to the northwest, toward the mouth of the Musselshell river, reaching a camping ground within six miles of that point on the evening of the 22d, after a hard march of fifty-two miles within twenty-four hours.

From the Yellowstone to the Missouri. During this march across the country from the Yellowstone to the Missouri, I sent out, to the front and left, scouts with directions to go on until they found some sign of the Indians and then to come in on my line of march and make reports, thus covering our command by a cloud of scouts and videttes for a long distance in advance and to the left. Some of these men rode a distance of more than two hundred miles before making any report. Within a circle of scouts kept from five to twenty-five miles in advance, and taking advantage of the high buttes to survey the country carefully over with field glasses or telescopes, we discovered no sign of the hostile Nez Perce.

Not hearing from one of my guides, an intelligent brave man, George Johnson, I afterwards learned that he had met with misfortune. Going down a stream known as Squaw creek, and coming to the bank of the Missouri, he supposed it was the Musselshell, a river which he had crossed many times by fording. Being desirous to reach, as he supposed, the other side of the Musselshell, he started to cross, but was heavily man, and his horse being undoubtedly weak, he got out into the whirlpools of the deep and turbulent Missouri, yet taking the greatest care of his kind of war ponies, which they were driving or leading and evidently getting in fine condition for service. They and themselves were mounted on very different ponies and mules, and some of them wearing old hats and coats and very ordinary Indian clothing. For the sudden and instantaneous transformation of these warriors when they came in close proximity to the enemy was startling and most interesting.

Part of our band of Indian allies that went out as scouts moved along beside the column apparently indifferent and listless, yet taking the greatest care of their kind of war ponies, which they were driving or leading and evidently getting in fine condition for service. They and themselves were mounted on very different ponies and mules, and some of them wearing old hats and coats and very ordinary Indian clothing. For the sudden and instantaneous transformation of these warriors when they came in close proximity to the enemy was startling and most interesting.

Getting Across the Missouri. Reaching camp six miles from the Missouri on the evening of September 23d, and desiring to take every chance of getting my command across the river and up the waters of this great river, I called upon Captain Hale to give me an officer who would ride forward and detain any steamer that might be either ascending or descending the Missouri. The horses of the Seventh cavalry had just been turned out to graze after a very long and a most difficult forced march.

In spite of the fact that he must have been very tired, Lieutenant Biddle quickly responded to the approval of Captain Hale he would go. "I replied that I would be very glad if he would take one of two men and ride forward rapidly for that purpose."

He had his horse saddled at once and accompanied by one soldier, in less than ten minutes he was disappearing from our view as he dashed at a gallop down the valley. I could not anticipate at that anxious moment the terrible tragedy that awaited in the near future these two enterprising and splendid officers. I do not think that Lieutenant Biddle drew relief until he stood on the bank of the Missouri just in time to hail the last regular steamer going down the river that season. As a result of taking advantage of every possible chance and the enterprise of the young officer, he sent word back that night, and when we reached the Missouri the next morning we found the steamer tied up at the bank awaiting us.

Early the next morning found us at the bank of the river and I immediately crossed over the battalion of the second cavalry under Captain Tyler. This was done for a double purpose; one was that they might move along the left bank and prevent the Nez Perce from crossing at any of the ferries above, and the other that they might continue on to the northwest, where I had been ordered to send a battalion of cavalry to escort General Terry on his peace commission to meet Sitting Bull with the Canadian officers north of the Canadian line. The balance of the command was moved up the river a short distance above the mouth of the Musselshell, and as all information I had received at that time indicated that the Nez Perce were still fifty or seventy-five miles south of the Missouri, I decided to move up the south bank that river to the mouth of the Missouri.

A Steamer Departs Too Soon. As I could not detain the steamer any great length of time, I gave permission for it to continue its journey down the river. Captain Baldwin, one of the most efficient of officers, who had been worn down by hard service, was by the advice of the surgeon instructed to go down the river for rest and also to hurry forward the steamer with the supplies which I had ordered up, before leaving the camping ground on the Yellowstone.

The steamer was being prepared to march to the west, and while the steamer was but a short distance away, three men came down the river in a boat and announced the fact that the Nez Perce had crossed the Missouri some sixty miles to the west of us, at a point known as Cow Island. This was one of the occasions in military affairs when, acting upon the best information obtainable, you suddenly find yourself greatly embarrassed by new information that is directly contradictory to the information that you were acting upon. The steamer was beyond halting distance, but as quick as thought Sergeant McHugh, whose piece of artillery was resting on the bank of the river, was ordered to take his gun, train it down the river, and commence firing shells as rapidly as possible. The reverberation of the canon down between the high bluffs or sides of the grand canon of that river and the bursting of shells in the air on the left bank could be heard for several miles down the Missouri, and I knew that if those soldiers reached the ears of that thorough soldier, Baldwin, he would turn back and move to the sound of the guns.

I was not mistaken in the man. In less than twenty or thirty minutes the soldiers sung out: "Here she comes." And a most welcome sight it was to see the black column of smoke as the steamer rounded the bend far below and came puffing up against the strong current. When she arrived I told Captain Baldwin that I was delighted to see him, though when we parted I did not expect to greet him so soon again; and he replied that "he knew something was wanted or that there was a fight, and that he wanted to be on hand in either case."

CIGARETTE COMPETITION. How Pictures Are Sometimes Secured by Firms To Sell Their Goods.

If the inducements by which the different cigarette firms appeal to the public are any indication of the actual situation, the competition among them must be sharp. Says The New York Sun. As attractions to smokers the pictures of actresses and professional beauties have evidently begun to lose their power. Already the likenesses of women in private life have been used by the cigarette firms to the dismay of the male relatives of the originals, and the responsibility for such a use of the pictures has generally been traced to the photographers. As no name was printed with the likenesses, the offense was slighter than it might otherwise have been. But a cutting-edge firm has gone a step further, and ingeniously used in at least two cases the photographs of girls who are popular in New York several years ago. A few months ago she went to a photographer and ordered a dozen pictures of herself in the society of her family, and when they were delivered to the young woman, she handed them to her friends, and the whole dozen accounted for. Some of the pictures were taken a few years ago. A friend wrote to her father from New York, enclosing a small photograph of the young woman with the name printed in it. It had been taken out of the box of the pictures, and the photographer conveyed to the indignant father the information that there were at least a dozen more of the same kind in the box. The picture was in New York, and the name which accompanied it was printed in the form she had given to the photographer. The pictures were evidently only put into the boxes to be sent to the town in which the young woman was known, and there was no trace of them from any other quarter. Another case with almost the same result was well known in society there, in some way came into possession of one of the cigarette firms and was used in a special inducement to smokers in her old home. As in the first case, her name was printed on the picture. The first photograph that came in such cases is usually a small one of the girl, and the photographs by means of an injunction, and the prospect of this is usually enough to lead the firms to suppress the photographs promptly.

Plants That Cost Lives and Large Fortunes to Secure.

"Sweet as a flower," "innocent as a flower," these are stock phrases of poets and novelists who seek in this world to portray the angelic qualities of their heroines.

But it is of the rose, lily and violet they are thinking, never of the orchid. Nobody applies the terms "sweet" and "innocent" to these eccentricities of nature, which are gloriously beautiful, grotesque, curious or even revolting, according to the peculiar tastes of the beholder. The orchid is always fascinating, always of some subtle charm, uncanny and mocking, like that which attaches to Pearl, the sprightly child of Hester of the "Scarlet Letter."

From the highest to the lowest there is a spice of mischief and mockery, intensified to positive wickedness and cruelty in some of these plants, as we shall presently see. In others there is just a hint of selfish intelligence—in the way the flower is perched upon its stem and showy, often grotesquely close, resemblance to the blossom or queer leaves to some animal or thing in nature, or even to a familiar household object, as a vase, goblet, pipe, etc.

The mischievous sense of conscious mimicry, which (even to an unfeeling eye) is apparent in the flower, makes it uncannily witching. One sees this even in the deer's head orchid of the Florida swamps, which, with its erect, brown horns, its lobellum, shaped exactly like a deer's head, and its long, thin, drooping leaves, is in an alert way that almost startles you.

Wandering amid the wilderness of roses and chrysanthemums that chiefly make up the flower garden, you are apt to overlook this city of the orchid lover may ask disappointedly why he does not see more of the rarer specimens of his favorite flower. It is because few of the tropical plants called warm orchids—can be brought to bloom in the fall. Spring is the time when they burst into glorious effluence.

An exception to this is the famous Cattleya labiata, which is the true autumn flowering variety. The labiata is especially noted on two accounts. First, it is the oldest of the American orchids, and the one which gives name to a species that includes the state-liest and most splendid blossoms in the world. Secondly, because with its discovery the native plant seems to have appeared. It was never known precisely whence it came and many thousands of dollars have been spent and not a few lives have been sacrificed since the discovery of Rio and Colombia for another wild specimen. In vain not a trace of it has been found in its native wilds since that first time was brought in by a sea captain (a free rover, the story goes) and given to the wife of his employer, whence it passed into the hands of the rich American fancier, Mr. C. C. Baker, and was christened with his patronymic. Since then it has been propagated all over the civilized world from that parent plant—found, heaven knows where, by the free booter captain.

But the labiata flourishes in its cultivated state, which is more than can be said for some of the fairer children of Florida. In the seventeenth century, when the first became known to us, we have destroyed the native stock of two "warm" varieties, and a third, the exquisite Mesaspidium vulcanicum—has vanished from the world, through no human fault, since its beauty was forever buried in the volcanic convulsions of the island of St. Vincent.

In the face of the fact that many cultivated orchids are constantly growing larger and finer, some pessimistic naturalists declare that the whole species is doomed to death—a prophetic oracle, since the plant grows as parasites upon a tree or vine, can flourish in a greenhouse, where they are dying all the time, in spite of appearances.

The naturalists call upon the governments of all civilized countries to follow the example of Spain and interfere to prevent the extermination of native orchids through the ravages of collectors, who, fired by enthusiasm or by the prospect of prices paid for fresh specimens, search the woods and swamps of equatorial countries, braving the poisonous reptiles and the yet deadlier miasma which, draped and guarded these peerless treasures of the vegetable world.

Mr. Burbridge suggests that some public benefactor should believe that beauty is a joy forever, should establish plantations of orchids in the countries where they grow naturally and devote himself to hybridizing these and creating new varieties. "One does not see a single hybrid orchid," he says, "as by breeding cattle," he says, "and of the two I should greatly prefer an orchid farm."

The enthusiasm of some naturalists in pursuit of new orchids amounts to perfect fanaticism. The Sella elegans, which finds refuge on inaccessible crags, has caused more than one eager hunter to be dashed to pieces while climbing to secure it. The marvelous Cattleya Doniana and its twin sister, the Cattleya Aurea—the latter is a native of the mountainous regions of earth—have cost human life and labor, not to speak of fortunes, in searching for specimens of the rare treasure.

The rarest is found in Colombia, the Aurea in Costa Rica and the thousand miles of unexplored wilds that lie between these two is believed to be the home of yet more wonderful varieties; but the voracious plant hunter would encounter terrible dangers through the deadly serpents, the swamp miasma and the unfriendly natives of that region.

Not less dangerous are the difficulties that beset the collectors in Burma, Sumatra and Madagascar. Before the splendid scarlet cymbidium could be secured two out of the three vigorous young collectors who had been sent to find it perished; the third brought back the prize, but his health was hopelessly wrecked.

Some of the most beautiful orchids are found in the superlative Humboldtia, a marvel with rose-pink petals and great frilled lips of luscious crimson, nearly cost its discoverer his life. Leon Humboldt, his brother, and six comrades—naturalists like himself—came to Madagascar to explore its jungles. In twelve months all had perished except Leon Humboldt himself. One had been soaked in oil and burned by the native priests, whom he had offended by accidentally shooting a hideous wooden idol. Humboldt, shattered in health, gave over his search for the orchid which some peddlars had been returned to France. But he would not give up entirely. He went back to the island and at last secured the plant. Coming home desperately ill, he lay two months in hospital at Mayotte, unconscious of all but the ringing with the praises of his gorgeous flower. He died, however, and a millionaire flower collector, had insisted on naming for him.

Truly, the habitat of these queens of the flower world is a death trap to their human ravishers. No wonder that fabulous sums—far into the thousands—have been paid for new and rare specimens.

The orchid worshiper will tell you that the wonderful plants are worth all that is paid for them in gold, labor and life. The beauty of the blossoms overpowers the senses. Conceive of a flower like the Cattleya Sanderiana—four in the point of its swamps of Bogota—eleven inches across, with sepals and petals of the softest, richest pink and a fringed crimson border—like a velvet—this flower, which first burst into bloom it was put upon exhibition in London, and $10,000 was taken in at the sale.

More gorgeous still are the Cattleya Doniana and the Cattleya Aurea. Of these an English botanist rapturously declares: "I cannot picture the glory of these marvels. In each the scheme of color is yellow and crimson, but there are important modifications. Yellow is the ground all through in the aurea, and the petals and lip, the latter superbly streaked with crimson. But Doniana shows crimson pendulings on its sepals, while the ground color of the lip is crimson—broadly lined and recheckered with gold. Imagine six of these noble flowers on one stalk, each flower a foot across! But it lies beyond the power of imagination. The Hardyana—a rare and splendid hybrid of the aurea—which sold at a thousand dollars a plant, has an immense flower, rose purple, the lip purple—marked with velvet wavy red.

Angusium Sanderianum—another of Mr. Sander's discoveries, is wondrously beautiful—a fountain of snow," as a poet calls it, its great, waxy, graceful garlands, each twenty or more inches in length and strung with splendid snowy blossoms.

The orchid craze, which a few years ago almost reached the pitch of the memorable tulip mania, has died out in a measure, but there is still a keen interest felt in these magical flowers; and the opening up of the fervid and frostless regions under the equator is looked forward to as bringing to light other and yet more wonderful specimens of the great orchid family, of which there are already 500 varieties—more wonderful, not only for beauty, but for strange and abnormal qualities. Rumor—not to be credited, perhaps, though one never need be skeptical in this surprising world of ours—have come, from time to time, of a vegetable monstrously resembling the octopus, or cuttle fish—an orchid furnished with numerous outstretched, tremulous feelers that attract and grasp winged insects and other living things and draw them into the red, fleshy opening in the center that serves as a mouth.

The vague accounts of this vegetable octopus, which a Paris story writer has built a horribly realistic story, are very likely unfounded; but there are flesh eaters among the plants, as we all know, and this brings us to that other class of orchids, distinguished, not for their beauty, but for their human-like cunning and cruelty.

Wicked and Murderous Plants.

Chief among the wicked orchids—by reason of its enormous size—is the Rafflesia, discovered by Sir Stamford Raffles in the midst of a dense jungle in the island of Sumatra. The Rafflesia is a parasite, and to have so startled the English baronet that he turned helplessly to his guide, believing that the Scotch whisky that he had imbibed as an antidote to malaria and snake-bite had gone to his head. No wonder he was startled! The flower, which grew parasitically on a prostrate creeper, was nine feet around and a little more than a yard across. It had five fleshy petals, mottled red in hue, "being in color, texture and smell almost exactly like a slightly tainted beefsteak. Beside the open mouth of the bud that looked like nothing under the sun but a very big and very red Dutch cabbage."

Sir Stamford, on inspecting his find, discovered, in the center of the big fleshy petals, a cup capable of holding six quarts of water. Instead of water, however, it held a quantity of dead and dying worms and the mass of the meat flies which the flower attracts by its resemblance to meat in the first stage of putrefaction. The confiding flies never discover that they have been "sold," in our expressive slang, but after depositing their eggs in what they believe to be a very fine nursery for their future little one, they lie away, leaving the young grub to hatch out and discover that they are "victims of misplaced parental confidence."

For a while it was believed that this gigantic orchid was a flesh eater, and that the grubs thus deceitfully brought into its capacious cup were in some way assimilated as nourishment; but it has been established that the most voracious of cross fertilization, instead of effecting this in a legitimate way, like decent flowers, by attracting respectable busy bees and dainty butterflies, and rewarding them with a drop of honey while receiving the pollen with which they are dusted and enmeshed, this orchid takes on the hue and scent of tainted meat in order to deceive a lower class of insects into performing for it the brutal office of depositing their eggs in the vilest of places among the orchids—plants that deceitfully decoy trustful insects into their attractive den and there treat them as vermin. The fashion of the wicked spider, only in a slow, noiseless way, all the more dreadful because uncanny.

The most imposing among the orchid insect eaters and the most voracious of India. These present big, showy-colored pitchers of classic, Grecian shape, which have lids that are closed until the plant gets ready to go to work. When the lid is lifted and the easily gulped moths, midges and other flies, allured by the splashes of color and the odor of the honey inside, are drawn in, the lid is closed into the viscous fluid, which closes over them and drowns them as helplessly as the poor duke of Clarence was drowned in the Maline river. The tiny insects are brought forth by the plant, which certainly brings forth the creatures that seek to quaff it, possesses the quality of insatiable appetite. The insect, which its juices may furnish the plant with the nitrogenous food it needs.

The largest and most stately variety of the insect eaters is the Nepenthes Rajah, whose flagon, holding a full quart of the fatal nectar, large insects, and even the remains of the tiny honey birds of the tropics, have been found.

Differently shaped, but getting their living after the same fashion, are the flesh-eating orchids of our own country—the Sarracenia and the side-sucker plant of Florida, whose crimson-spotted tube I have often torn open to find it half-filled with partly-digested insects, and the graceful, fully fawn-colored pitcher of Texas, which suggested to Mollie Moore her beautiful dramatic poem, "The Tankards."

The staller and more showy Darlingtonia of California is an orange-colored pitcher, the hood and lid like its Indian cousin, the Rajah, and half full of a similar viscous honey, in which the entrapped insects are drowned and slowly digested to be sucked up by the plant.

There are a great many more of these highly-developed insect-eaters, among them the hellgramite of Guyana and the Copelandia of Australia, the humbler sundews and butterworts of sub-tropical regions, and most notable because of its rarity and the way it does its work, the Venus flytrap, another California flower, but one that is found only in a narrow area around Wilmington in southern California. The Venus flytrap does not offer a deadly chalice Borgia-like to its victims, but it sets for them a most ingenious trap by means of its lurid-colored leaf that can fold together at the mid rib and is furnished with jagged, saw-like teeth at each edge and some very sensitive hairs inside. No sooner does an insect touch one of these hairs than the edges come together with a sticky liquid pour over the imprisoned prey and he is digested and assimilated.

It must be remembered that in none of these cases is it the flower proper that performs the murderous work, but the leaf, queerly shaped, as with most orchids. The flower flirts away with the sun, seemingly unconscious of the tricky practices by which it is supported and thereby ruining one of the female decoy of a genteel gambling house.

Another fact is significant. When these flesh eaters are cultivated and fertilized with enough ammonia and nitrogen they soon become very voracious and seek to attract and murder insects, and in a circumstance that might suggest to our law-givers that the way to put a stop to crime among the troublesome classes is to furnish them with enough food for body and mind.

PEACE HATH ITS VICTORIES.

BY EUGENE FIELD.

(Copyright, 1895, by Bachelier, Johnson & Bachelier.)

CHAPTER I.

Lucius had been farming it for going on twenty-five years. By conspicuous service in the war he had risen from ranks to the office of first lieutenant, and there he was a doubt in his mind that he was held out long enough he would have been a colonel. As it was, he was called captain by all his neighbors, some of whom had also done patriotic service during the stormy times of the rebellion.

When peace was declared Lucius was honorably discharged from the army, and he went back home to engage in farming once more. But he was not long in finding out that the home place had grown smaller while he was absent; very soon he began to feel cramped and restricted, and he developed presently a violent case of the western fever. So he said good-by to the homestead one day and started westward. Reaching Iowa he purchased, upon reasonable terms, a farm of 200 acres, and he proceeded at once to till in the most approved fashion. The place was about five miles from the hamlet of Prairie Home, his nearest neighbors were the Beasleys. Old man Beasley was one of the pioneers in Iowa; he had been elected to the legislature three successive terms; he had run for congress and been beaten, and he had run for governor and been beaten. He was a likely virgin with drab ringlets and a bilious complexion. Her dowry consisted of a trunkful of house linen and a spotted calf.

Fortune smiled upon Lucius. Crops were good and market prices for grain were high. In short, the young couple fared prosperously that the second summer of their wedded life they were able to buy a buggy to ride to town on Sundays and on other occasions. In due time, too, Lucius was enabled to add to the number of his barns, stables and granaries; he had not been farming it in Iowa more than ten years before folks had him worth $20,000, and he must have been, for when he acquired the new picture history of the country came along he subscribed for five copies and paid extra for having his portrait put in the book.

One day Neighbor Higgins drove by. Lucius halted to him and asked him what was going on up at town. Higgins allowed that there was nothing new unless it was that some of the boys were talking about organizing a Grand Army post; they had decided to have an informal meeting Saturday to discuss the practicability of the scheme. This was pleasant news to Lucius. The one thing that Lucius pined for was association with the boys, and by "the boys" he meant (as we mean) the glorious men who did service in the war for the union. Lucius pined for opportunities to talk over old times, to recount the prodigies he had performed in valor, and to review in the companionship of kindred souls the old-time spirit and enthusiasm.

Upon the following Saturday night, therefore, Lucius hitched up the buggy and went to town. The meeting was held in the room over Simms's general store. There were only nine of the boys there, but others said they would join the post as soon as the organization was completed. So the post was organized amid great enthusiasm, and it was known to the world as Corporal Tanner post, No. 132, Grand Army of the Republic. With their first money the members of the post bought a flag, a melodeon and a dozen copies of "Patriotic Songs for Male Voices." This was all the equipment needed.

For a number of years the institution prospered; to be more explicit, for the period of six years Corporal Tanner post, No. 132, Grand Army of the Republic, elected every official in the county, and it came to be suspected that nobody had a show in Bayonet county politics unless he was a member of that Grand Army of the Republic post. But in the ever-to-be-lamented year of 1884 the tidal wave of civil service reform struck Bayonet county very hard. A young lawyer, who had come to Iowa only two years and he invited all honest citizens to rally to the purification of national politics. This singularly hardened young man heaped obloquy upon the Grand Army of the Republic, and urged the voters to repudiate the influence of the clutches of a ring that sought maintenance at the public expense by parading the unholy sentiments of the Union League. A war had been declared twenty years ago, and the sickening result of this agitation was that the voters of Bayonet county decided, by a large majority, to suffer the festering wounds of the civil war to heal; in other words, the patriots were ignominiously ousted of office and a set of younger and wholly unimpeachable civilians were installed.

The four years' administration of the civil service reform president, involving as it did the desecration of the pension roll, was a most grievous blow to Corporal Tanner post, No. 132, Grand Army of the Republic. Israel Hotchkiss, who had lost an arm in the Civil War, had applied for an indemnity on account of loss of hearing, resulting from sleeping in the rain during the peninsular campaign. A patriotic congress indorsed this application, but the measure appropriating $60 to Israel's credit was vetoed by the unfriendly president upon the grounds that the back files of the national meteorological bureau indicated that no rain at all had fallen during the entire period of the peninsular campaign. In vain did the congressman from Israel's district inveigh against this unchristian act; in vain did Corporal Tanner post, No. 132, Grand Army of the Republic, formally call upon the unfriendly president to resign. It was all too apparent that Corporal Tanner post, No. 132, Grand Army of the Republic, had lost its grip.

As if to complicate an already distressing condition of affairs, Simms's general store burned up one night, and the property of Corporal Tanner post—including twenty-four chairs, one pine table, one copy of "Harris's Races," one flag, two kerosene lamps, one melodeon and a dozen patriotic songbooks—fell a prey to the remorseless flames; no insurance. All that was saved was a pair of canned peaches, and they belonged to Simms.

In this most critical emergency Lucius came to the rescue. "I am, by the kindness of fortune," said he, "enabled to do somewhat for this noble cause. I will build a building for Corporal Tanner post and give to the hall in the building the post for permanent occupancy, reserving only the rentals derived from the two stores in the lower story." This was a handsome one of brick; an architect from Cedar Rapids devised it. At the dedication of the hall speeches eulogistic of Lucius were delivered, and at the next regular meeting of the post Lucius was elected chairman of the delegation to the national encampment. The other delegates were joyful Hank Baker. Hank had died at Antietam.

This was the honor that Lucius had long coveted. "In Bayonet county," said he to himself, "the soldier boys have, by a most unjust decree of perverse fate, fallen into disrepute. Elsewhere it is otherwise. I shall do to the national encampment, hear the old songs, see the old faces, be honored as a veteran soldier and return home encouraged and re-habilitated."

Susan couldn't bear the thought of his going away, and it was only after he had promised to bring them something that the children became reconciled to his departure. "Don't go out after dark, or you'll get stabbed," were Susan's last words. "Those city folks are powerful bad, I hear."

"Why earth have you raised the price of tickets?" asked Lucius of the station agent.

"We had to do it," said the agent. "The war in Hayti has given everything an upward tendency, you know."

Lucius didn't know, but he supposed it was all right.

Curiously enough the other delegate, the jovial Hank Baker, did not show up at the railway station; but presently Hank's before from the east, announced in the democratic weekly that he was a mug-oldest girl—she had pale blue eyes and long yellow hair—came moping along. "Mother allows that father ain't goin'," said the girl, "and mother won't let 'im," said the girl. "Ain't goin'," echoed Lucius. "Naw; mother won't let 'im," said the girl. "If I was Hank I'd go anyhow," said Lucius. "But he can't," remonstrated the girl. "If mother's took off his leg 'nd locked it up."

CHAPTER II.
So Lucius had to pursue his journey alone. The train was crowded. Lucius finally, however, found a seat beside a grim but intellectual-looking passenger in the smoking car. The atmosphere of the car was oppressive. As night came on there was Titanic snoring all around. Lucius tried to raise one of the windows, but the rain of the previous day had swelled it and it stuck fast.

"I wonder," said Lucius to his grim but intellectual-looking fellow traveler, "I wonder what makes the air so close in this car?"

To this query the other answered, solemnly: "I opine that some gentleman has drawn a boot."

They stopped eight minutes for breakfast next morning. The menu was soda crackers and pepper sauce. When Lucius was asked to pay 75 cents for this entertainment he expostulated.

"What do you want for 75 cents?" demanded the drowsy money-changer at the door, "terrapin soup and lemon pie?" Lucius returned to the smoking car only to find that during his absence his seat had been taken by a lady with the asthma. The next 100 miles Lucius stood up, buying things of the train boy every time that an unassuming person came along. It was a dreary, weary while, but Lucius was not sorry that he had come. "I shall presently be more than repaid," thought he.

The destination was reached at last. Every city is hot in the middle of an August afternoon. Lucius's paper collar felt off just as he stepped from the train. As he sought to elbow his way through the steam ing crowd he could not help thinking how trees of a certain Iowa home lot he had in mind. For some reason or other his carpet bag seemed to weigh a ton. "I must be all worn out," thought Lucius. "Well, no wonder, for I didn't get a wink's sleep all night."

Lucius tried nine hotels, but couldn't find that one member of his old regiment had come to the encampment—had traveled 1,500 miles to mingle with the boys and renew dear old times. This was Bill Merrill; he used to be sutler in Lucius's regiment. Having achieved wealth, he was now a candidate for nomination to congress in his home district. He wanted to be elected grand commander of the Grand Army of the Republic this time, because that would help him get the congressional nomination.

Lucius found out all that night. Oh, but it was hot, and brewers will snore! "Didn't I hear dogs howling all night?" asked Lucius next morning.

"Like as not you did," said the landlady. "The dog pound is just back of the house, and I've noticed that at this season of the year the poor creatures are awfully bothered with insomnia."

Going out upon the street Lucius saw a handsomely dressed man, who appeared to be weeping. The man allowed that he was an old soldier from Chicago. He showed Lucius a telegram saying: "Come at once; Mamie is worse." The stranger said that Mamie was his only daughter.

"If she is sick why don't you go home?" asked Lucius. He pitied the distressed father.

"I have barely time to catch the train as it is, and I have hardly money enough by me in currency to take me through," sobbed the poor fellow. Then he wondered (audibly) whether Lucius would be willing to cash his check for $50?

"I reckon I'll have to do it," said Lucius. "Although I won't leave me much change to run on till the bank opens."

Unhappy, thrice unhappy Lucius! Beguiled by sentimental vanity to leave a pleasant, prosperous home to brave the malignities of the hot and dusty and sinful metropolis, and to fall presently a victim to the arts of the swindler—oh, thrice unhappy Lucius! said we!

But happy Hank Baker! Happy in the possession of that wooden leg, enduring trademark of old and most honorable warriors, and by the simple act of comprehending, raving and acquiescing that ignominious member, had plucked their life if they had been a brand, from the burning!

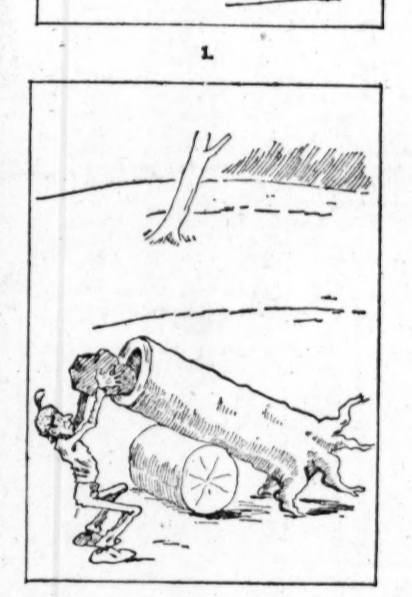

As in a Glass, Darkly.

From The Washington Star.

"I think," said the weary looking man, "that I have found a way to cure my life of the bloomer habit. Lucius, 'well, no wonder, for I didn't get a wink's sleep all night.'"

"I know it is. It's a delicate undertak-

ANOTHER MARVELOUS ESCAPE.

PLUNKETT'S LETTER.

For The Constitution.
It is the first time in our lives that Brown and I have come to an agreement to be cheerful always and everywhere.

We have been a comfort to each other ever since we came to this agreement. If we go to a funeral we go a-smiling, come back in high glee and laugh to kill when our friends call us old fools for giggling so much. We have but one tone of voice—a cheerful tone—we grin at everything and sing but one song—

"Just let the world war as it will. We'll be gay and happy still."

Experience has taught us that man can not judge as to what he should grieve about. The very thing that we take for the worst thing that could have happened turns out to be good. Besides it is not pleasant to be looked upon as gloomy old cranks. I want to tell a little story as illustrative of this, and also, that kindness is most sure to have its reward.

We took a spell of riding on the electric cars, and away out on one of the lines, where briars are thick and the place lonely, our car suddenly came to a standstill. Before we had time to wonder about what the matter was our motorman had grabbed a bucket filled with oats and bran and run out and put it down at the mouth of a poor old horse that had been turned out to die and had arrived at such condition that he could no longer stand and walk around to nip the grass.

This was a kind act of the motorman, and the passengers began to discuss him. Some thought that the old horse might be one of the old street car horses and that the motorman felt tender for him on account of former associations. Some thought one thing and some another, but all thought that the motorman had performed a worthy act, and every passenger wanted to learn his name.

"Thomas Hood," was the name that the conductor gave the motorman.

"Thomas Hood, Thomas Hood," mused a dignified old gentleman, as the name was spoken.

I saw the old gentleman's eye follow the motorman's return to his post, and as he stepped upon the platform the old gentleman arose and offered his hand, and I never saw a meeting where eyes looked kindlier into eyes when both were convinced that they knew each other.

I will have to take you away back into the states to explain this meeting. This motorman—Thomas Hood—was a small boy in 1864. He had seen his home stripped of everything by foraging parties from the armies. Every horse had been taken to pull the army wagons and the cattle, the hogs, the chickens—everything—had been taken to feed the soldiers. There was only one thing left at the home of Thomas Hood—a pet calf that he had taken charge of and kept out of the way of the foragers. He had seen his home stripped of everything by foraging parties from the armies. Every horse had been taken to pull the army wagons and the cattle, the hogs, the chickens—everything—had been taken to feed the soldiers. OUR ADVERTISING MAN'S DREAM.

Three dogs barked incessantly in a neighbor's yard from 1 a. m. to 3 a. m. yesterday morning, and for two mortal hours the "ad" man didn't have a thing to do but lie on his back and think. He thought what a nuisance the dogs were and wished they were dog-goned, and he also thought of a few items that have been clamoring for a word in the papers, and he fell into a doze and wrote this "ad." He might have forgotten all about these Special Items, except that the canine disturbances reminded him that the prices of some things were going to the dogs. For instance:

ONE CENT PER MILE FOR ROUND TRIP.

Copyright, 1935, by George Grantham Bain. Senator Teller, of Colorado, has just been east on a business trip. He went west before the report of his candidacy for the republican nomination was suggested and he did not discuss that matter with any one. He is, however, a republican, and he is, however, as advocating the nomination of Mr. Allison, and this expression is contradicted flatly in an interview of more than a week ago. Mr. Teller is one of the most outspoken men in public life. Whatever he thinks on any public question he is not afraid to say. He is a very old man, and Senator Morton, said of him in conversation a few days ago, he is quite able to hold his own in debate.

"I am in sympathy with Senator Teller was held for the purpose of newspaper publication and he authorized the use of it as it appears here," said Sen. Teller.

"I am in sympathy," said Senator Teller, "in favor of the two metals, gold and silver. How that is to be brought about except through the adoption of the free coinage law, I do not know. I think that some one can suggest a way. No one has. We have nothing to expect from this administration and nothing from the next one. I think that the influence of three or four men in New York—or possibly two would cover it. I could not name them, but I could not doubt you could name them, and neither party will name a man who will be satisfactory to the silver states. If you do, the silver parties are going to disintegrate in Colorado."

"It looks as if the next president would be a republican. And it looks as though the republican would be a gold man, and though he would be a gold man, if no Colorado will vote the republican ticket. As for my party, the republican party names a gold candidate. I do not know if that is so. I will not justify myself by supporting a candidate whose principles are opposed to the best interests of the country and to the best interests of the American people. I should prefer to resign from the senate and retire from politics, but I will support the man whose principles I do not approve. The people of Colorado will be against any candidate who is against the gold interests."

I asked the senator if he thought Colorado were taking a very lively interest in politics.

"We are interested chiefly in making money," he said. "They are engaged largely in developing the gold fields of the state. The silver mines are still producing, but to a very small extent, and before the decline in the value of silver. The well developed mines with large re-producers are closed down; the smaller mines of the state are developing wonderfully. I believe that within a very short time we will be producing about $5,000,000 a year in gold. The Cripple Creek camp is the most remarkable mining camp several days ago. I was down there taking out how a million dollars a month. I think they are taking out about eight million dollars the month. The output is increasing all the time. And the output in mining machinery now which will increase the yield wonderfully. Stratton, who owns one of the finest properties in the camp, will not take out more than a certain amount a month, because he has no use for so much money. He is a very old man now than he knows what to do with. So even in the next year or two the camp will be producing probably to its full capacity. The gold yield in the Cripple mine is going to increase, though. I think that within five years the production of gold will be about the same as it is now."

"And what will be the result of that?"

"An increase in the price of silver. Price has enough advance to bring the price back to the point where the silver in a dollar is worth about 60 cents. All prices are bound to advance with the greater influx of gold and the price of silver will rise. The rest, and silver will be a commodity no longer, but will move from the minds of the people their prejudice against silver which grows out of the fact that silver is a metal that is worth only 50 cents worth of silver bullion. It cannot make people understand somehow that when the mints of the United States are closed, the silver in a dollar is worth the United States will not be paying out 50 cents worth of metal—that the value of the silver when it comes out of the mint is worth 60 cents."

"Do you believe that the establishment of another ratio than 16 to 1 would help solve the silver problem?"

"I believe that much silver in circulation at that ratio now to admit of a change. In India there are enormous quantities in circulation at 15 to 1. No, the ratio of 16 to 1 is the best. It is the best where. And I believe that if the United States, Germany and France would throw their mints open to free coinage, or if they would have to come to it in time, England could not hold out. What makes India's wheat sell in England? The fact that India has a surplus of wheat. India will principal coin in circulation in India, will purchase as much in India today as it can get. India has a surplus of wheat as much as the Indian wheat exporter gets twice as many rupees per bushel for his wheat as he would if silver was at par. I think that if India would have the surplus of wheat from India to Europe. We are suffering now a great disadvantage in our foreign commerce because of the rate of exchange. It is the worst we have ever had from that in the near future. And I believe that if we do not have the free coinage, the silver in a dollar will have a competition which will not only drive manufactures out of foreign markets but will bring in from Asia a class of cheap labor that will compete with our own. The low price of silver acts as a tariff on all imports into the silver-using countries from the gold standard countries and as a bounty on all the exports from the silver-using countries to the gold countries. This is the reason why the silver-using countries are so poor as well as the gold countries from those countries to gold countries. In exchange for their exports they receive gold and silver. They have to take the silver, coin it and put it into the currency of the country with the same purchasing power as the gold of twenty years ago. Thus we not only destroy our own silver, but we would be the nominee of the republican party next year.

[illegible]

"I have an idea," he said, "that it will be a good idea to have discussed—some outside on whom the moneyed people of the east will agree and for whom they will raise the necessary funds to get the nomination and carry on the campaign. I suppose you know how Cleveland and Harrison were nominated."

I pleaded guilty to attendance on both the national conventions in 1882 as well as in 1888. And I suggested that both of them were nominated by votes of the delegates.

"They were both nominated by money raised in New York," said the senator.

"The night before Harrison was nominated a supporter of Mr. Harrison was going around Michigan and had been drafted for $3,000, which some one had given him. I do not know what he wanted to do with the money at that time of night, but it was generally suggested that it was to hold some wavering supporters in the line. Both Cleveland and Harrison were nominated through the influence of the rich people of the east. The next candidate, I believe, will be nominated in the same way. The populists certainly cannot elect. With the show-brokers having made this administration think the democrats don't stand any chance at all."

"Would Senator Allison be acceptable to the rich people of Colorado?"

"He would be more acceptable than some of the other candidates, but even he would not be acceptable. Colorado wants a candidate who has not been present—squarely and openly. No other candidate will be acceptable to the people of Colorado. These gentlemen are not in their own country, so the subject would better speak for himself. I will assume that the man who is not for us is against us. We want a silver candidate and from present appearances I fear we will not get one from her party."

"It is certain the electoral vote of Colorado will not be given to a gold man in 1896, even if it is given to the man who is elected."

WELL 12 FEET.

A Trolley Car in Cleveland Goes Through an Open Draw.

FOURTEEN PERSONS KILLED

The Motorman Leaped to the Bridge and Ran Rapidly Away.

TWO MEN SAVED BY JUMPING

Conductor, Through Whose Negligence the Accident Occurred, Went Down.

ONE PASSENGER RESCUED AND LIVING

Intense Excitement and Deep Grief in the Lake City—All the Bodies Apppear to Have Been Recovered.

Cleveland, O., November 16.—A frightful accident by which thirteen people lost their lives occurred this evening. Owing to the negligence of the conductor, a street car, carrying a full complement of passengers, plunged over the edge of the Central viaduct into the dark waters of the Cuyahoga river.

The accident occurred at 7:25 o'clock. The Central viaduct is a long stone and iron structure which crosses the Valley railroad and the Cuyahoga river, and connects the city with the south side of the river. It is one hundred and twenty feet above the water.

The draw was open for a tug drawing a schooner, which was about to pass beneath the bridge. As usual, the gates were closed on both sides of the draw and danger lights were displayed to guard against an accident. An electric car was seen coming along the east toward the south side, but the conductor, John Rogers, who has charge of the bridge, had no thought of danger, as the car was one of the Cedar and Jennings avenue branch of the big Consolidated line, and had fifteen passengers, a conductor and motorman aboard. At what is known as the "derailing switch," some two hundred feet from the draw, the conductor mechanically alighted, as is the wont of all conductors at this point, to see if all was right. The car came to a standstill and the motorman waited for orders.

The conductor, for some unaccountable reason, failed to see the red signal of danger or the closed gates, or perhaps custom made him careless, and he signalled to the motorman, John Rogers, to come ahead. The motorman turned on the electric current, and the car started forward, and at considerable speed the vehicle neared the deathtrap.

Why the motorman did not see the danger lights or the closed gates sooner than he did will always remain a mystery, but the fact remains that he did not.

A few feet from the draw it dawned upon the motorman that it was open. With a speed born of desperation he threw the handle and applied the brakes.

Three Men Jumped. The bridge captain, seeing the approaching car, shouted like a madman, but it availed nothing. The car was already on the down grade to the draw and the brakes were not able to hold the car on the slippery rails. The motorman, realizing his danger, forsook the precious cargo he was handling, and with a wild cry leaped off the front platform, ran down the viaduct in the direction of Center avenue and disappeared in the darkness.

At the same instant two male passengers jumped off the rear platform and escaped death by a miracle. The car reached the closed iron gates and in an instant the crash of snapping iron and breaking glass was heard. This alarmed the conductor, who had stepped inside, and he was seen to make a dash for the rear door, but he was too late.

The Fatal Plunge. A second later the car swayed on the edge of the awful space, steadied for an instant, as though in a frantic endeavor to maintain its equilibrium and toppled over. There was an agonizing chorus of screams and in an instant all was quiet.

The car struck upon a projection of piles in the abutment beneath the draw, then turning and collapsing it fell into the dark river below, scattering its passengers in all directions and breaking the tow line between the tug and schooner that were passing.

A few suppressed groans were heard by the men who happened to be on the docks below. Men from the bridge above and from the docks who had witnessed the accident, called to the men on the tug to pick up the people, but only two passengers, one man and one woman, were rescued.

Identifying the Dead. The news of the accident spread rapidly and in a few minutes a fire boat, six ambulances, six dead wagons and a squad of policemen were on hand. The injured man and woman were taken to a hospital and the bodies of the others were taken up. One by one they were found and taken to the undertakers' establishments in different parts of the city, as Cleveland has no morgue.

The work of identification was extremely slow. Late at night, when the south side residents heard of the catastrophe, the undertakers began to return home, the unidentifiable bodies were telephoned and visited, the bodies were identified, before midnight. The police are on the lookout for the motorman and extra officers in every part of the city are searching for him, but thus far he has not been apprehended.

Fourteen Are Dead. Among the dead identified up to midnight were:

MISS MARTHA SAUTENHEIMER and

MRS. JOHN SAUTENHEIMER, HER sister-in-law, of 144 Market avenue. JOHN HOFFMAN, the conductor. CURT LEPPEHNE, a sixteen-year-old boy, who had a ticket in his pocket from London, Canada, to Victoria, B. C. BESSIE DAVIES, school teacher of Noyes street, nineteen years of age. HENRY W. HICKLEBURN, tailor, 18 Mary street, thirty-eight years of age. HARRY W. HOBSTER, clerk at the Root & McBride Company, 51 Mentor avenue, twenty-five years of age. JAMES McLAUGHLIN, printer, No. 75 Trowbridge avenue, thirty-six years of age. PERKINSON. JOHN BORRINGER and GEORGE ROSS were the men who jumped off the platform.

MRS. A. W. HOFFMAN and her son, HARVEY HOFFMAN, ten years old, of 1508 Pearl street.

MRS. STAUDT, twenty-one years old, nurse in the Northern Ohio insane asylum. MRS. BROWN, of No. 85 Thurman street, forty-five years old.

Fat Rooney was taken out of the river alive but badly injured. The woman who was taken from the river alive was Mrs. Sautenheimer, who died in the ambulance.

The second which were enacted in Detroit after the Journal disaster were repeated at the viaduct disaster tonight and understood the ghastly scene. The accident became noised about they hurried to the docks with their dead wagons and engines in the hands of the men for the corpses. In one instance the head of a body was on the stretcher while the feet of another establishment pulled the feet over on their own stretcher. Cries of grief and alarm were heard from the crowd that was kept up. The motorman was found after midnight by two detectives and he was panic-stricken and ran away because he was unable to see the gates or the lights until the crash came.

IN REDWINE'S FAVOR.

Dr. Rowles Sends in a Report Urging His Pardon.

Columbus, O., November 16.—(Special.)—In response to a request from the department of justice at Washington, Dr. Rowles this morning forwarded a written report of his examination of Lewis Redwine, serving six years for embezzling the funds of the Gate City National bank of Atlanta. Redwine has been in stripes nearly three years and the imprisonment and worry have greatly impaired his health.

Last summer he had two severe hemorrhages, one occasion had to be carried to the hospital. For two weeks his life hung by a very slender thread and the physicians almost gave up hope of his recovery. But there was a change for the better and he gradually regained his strength, and after an illness of two months was able to resume his duties in the bank manager's office. He has never been in any trouble since that time, and his friends, through an attorney in Atlanta, have brought strong pressure on the department of justice for his release.

Dr. Rowles recommended Redwine for executive clemency and stated in his report that in his opinion the prisoner would not live to serve out his sentence if kept in confinement much longer.

Dr. Rowles also examined Samuel Peoples, a Georgia whitepaper, at the request of the Washington authorities. Peoples' health has also been impaired by his confinement. Dr. Rowles made a statement of his present condition without making any recommendations.

DETECTIVES IN JAIL.

Killed an Innocent Man While Shooting at a Guilty One.

Chicago, November 16.—With the exception of the men who shot at the city detectives succeeded in locating Clarence White, the man whom the Berry gang operatives supposed they were killing last night. White, who was shot in the chest, was in the buggy with his brother. He had in his pocket a Chicago revolver which he had taken from the Chicago Great Western road and had been with his brother to the depot. Finding the train would not leave until 10 o'clock, he decided to wait at the depot, intending to take the train at 1:30 o'clock at Forest Home, the first stop out of Chicago. One of the big bullets from Detective Dix's revolver penetrated Frank White's head and he fell over dying. Clarence says neither he nor his brother were armed.

KILLED THE YOUTH.

A Negro Does Murder and Escapes to the Mountains.

Harrisburg, Pa., November 16.—(Special.)—At Joppatowne yesterday James D. Kelly, nineteen years of age, son of J. M. Kelly, together with several hired hands, was working on the canal. A negro named Hurd, in a passion at some instructions given him, struck young Kelly over the head and crushed the skull. The boy died instantly. The negro is hidden in the mountains near here, but will certainly be caught before tomorrow, as the famous bloodhounds of the Chittaugus police department are now on his trail.

MATCH FACTORY BURNED.

Three Employees Lose Their Lives in the Flames.

Detroit, Mich., November 16.—The factory of the Improved Match Company, a branch of the match trust, was destroyed by fire at 10 o'clock this morning. Three persons were burned to death—Ruth Davis, freeman; Thomas Wagner, watchman; Agnes Getke, an employee. Davis and Wagner were unable to get away from the burning building. Miss Getke, after getting out, went back for her clothing and was not seen again. The match factory was a two-story building, and was not being repaired. The fire started from one of the employees stepping on a match.

MR. FRASER WITHDRAWS.

The Solicitor Quits the Race and Asks to Be Judge MacDonnell.

Savannah, Ga., November 16.—(Special.)—Solicitor General W. W. Fraser announced this afternoon that he had withdrawn from the race for the judgeship of the city court and it is now believed that Governor H. H. MacDonnell will re-appoint J. H. MacDonnell, a prominent interests in this city. Mr. Fraser did not give any reason for his withdrawal, but said he decided on this course several days ago.

Amounted to Nothing.

New York, November 16.—A general strike of the Iron League of America and Coach Drivers has fizzled out. The "strike of sympathy" ordered against the firm of Joseph Seach, who was a stampede back to work in all the other stables. Carriage service was resumed at all of the hotels and clubs except those served by Seach & Son.

Hotel Burned.

Marmora, Ont., November 16.—Stanley's hotel at 11 Village forty miles north of here, was destroyed by fire Thursday night. Two guests of the hotel, whose names cannot be ascertained, were burned to death. A large amount of money was also burned.

CHANCE OF HIS LIFE

Olney Has an Opportunity To Make a Great Grand Stand Play.

CAN CALL ENGLAND DOWN

Just at This Juncture She Would Probably Lay Down When Called.

HER ATTENTION OCCUPIED IN THE EAST

British Interests in Turkey and China Are of More Importance Than the Disputed Territory in Venezuela.

Washington, November 16.—(Special.)—In diplomatic circles it is believed that the agitation of the powers over the eastern question ends all danger of conflict between the United States and Great Britain over the enforcement of the Monroe doctrine.

It is thought that if the state department presses the matter at this time to a speedy conclusion a peaceable victory will be won by the United States. England has her hands full to hold her own with other powers. If the division of Turkey is imminent and with war threatened on the continent, it is likely that she would go a long way to avoid embroilment with the United States. The interests in the east, it is argued, are so much greater that she could well afford to forego her claims of very doubtful value and validity in Venezuela. It is the custom of all nations who make a point of the practice of diplomacy, and especially of Great Britain, to seize such an opportunity as is now presented to the United States to secure a satisfactory settlement of disputes. It is understood that Mr. Olney fully appreciates the situation and is endeavoring to make the most of it.

The question that Spain may cede Cuba to Great Britain rather than let it fall under the influence of the United States, which is made in the dispatches this morning, it is not enough much of, for the same reason of England's eastern complications, if for no other reason, England surely doesn't want to add anything more to her troubles. Lord Salisbury's desire to establish a friendly alliance with this country, it is surmised, was influenced by the fact that the United States is now in Turkey. This country will put its fingers in that pie except to protect American citizens, and even if compelled to join other nations in chastising the Turks, would ask for no part in the partition of the empire, but the moral influence of the friendship of the United States is not to be despised. It is thought that the United States is in a position to carry out its policy in England in any conflict that may occur over the eastern question.

Altogether, it is argued that events are falling out fortunately for Mr. Olney, and the luck may give the administration a victory which might not be so easily attained under different circumstances. Considerations similar to those expected to influence the action of Great Britain as to Venezuela may operate to secure a satisfactory settlement of the Waller case with France. The dispatches from Paris that this case is being earnestly pressed are considered to indicate that Mr. Olney is availing himself of the situation in that matter, also.

WHITNEY INTERVIEWED.

Would Like To Be President but Is No Candidate.

New York, November 16.—The Recorder this morning prints an interview with Mr. William C. Whitney, in which in reply to a question as to his candidacy for the next democratic presidential nomination, Mr. Whitney is reported as saying: "I wish it understood that I am not a candidate for the presidency. I am not a politician and I do not know of anything that can change it. 'Your friends have used your name as a possible candidate.' 'Yes; it has been mentioned with others, but I hope now that my name will be dropped. I am not in any way connected with the presidential campaign. I prefer to remain in private life, and those who know me are aware of the reasons.'"

INSURGENT VICTORY REPORTED.

Jacksonville, Fla., November 16.—A cablegram to The Times-Union from Key West, Fla., says:

"The steamer Olivette tonight was packed to her utmost with Cuban passengers, many of whom were armed. Some of the passengers report that Gomez and Macao have passed from Camaguey to Los Villas district, crossed the La Trocha as they were in the night."

"The insurgent Matanzas with 500 men had an engagement with the Spanish troops near Cienega Zapatos, province of Matanzas. The Spanish column was wounded and captured and sixty of his men killed. The insurgents' lost twenty-five killed and wounded."

"The insurgents have fired the towns of Savanilla and Pajura. It is reported that the filibustering expedition that left here Monday has landed in Las Villas district."

PITTSBURGH NOT ALARMED

Over Chicago's Offer for the Republican Convention.

Pittsburgh, Pa., November 16.—The offer of Thomas H. Carter, chairman of the republican national committee to deliver the next national convention in Chicago, for $50,000 cash and an agreement to pay the working expenses of the gathering, did not seriously alarm the citizens who are booming Pittsburgh for the convention. Pittsburgh has had for some weeks a guarantee fund of $50,000 and that sum has been largely contributed by the friends of the convention. A question of money there will be double $50,000 raised without any trouble. Already Pittsburgh has some powerful workers enlisted in her behalf, and it is believed that the city will be able to pay off the debt and all others that may be contracted, Pittsburgh is believed to have a better chance than Chicago, owing to the early start made by this city.

A Strike Will Be Ordered.

New York, November 16.—The members of the Iron League have refused to accept the terms of the demands made by the Housewives and Bridgemen's Union to arbitration and the strike of 1,000 men belonging to the league will be ordered on Sunday. Upon the attitude of the iron league will depend on how many men will be called out in sympathy. If necessary, from 10,000 to 20,000 men will be called out before the end of next week.

Prominent Belgian Absconds.

Brussels, November 16.—The cashier of the Societe Generale has absconded, leaving a deficit in his accounts of $5,000,000 francs. It was discovered that he was missing a warrant was issued for his arrest. It is supposed that his disappearance was caused by speculation in gold mines.

to say that you are mistaken. Simply because I have chosen for my wife an American girl, it does not follow that I am a fortune hunter. God forbid that I should be such. It is with no hesitancy that I tell you I am not what some people have represented me to be. I did not seek money; I sought the girl I loved, and I married her honorably, and I may say without ostentation."

MORE ARMENIANS MASSACRED.

Figures That Show How Are the Aggressors.

London, November 16.—The representative of the United Press at Constantinople reports, that at 6 o'clock of November 15th, that at 6 o'clock on the evening of November 15th, Mr. M. A. Jewett, United States consul at Syvas, sent a telegram to United States Minister Terrell informing him that in disturbances which had taken place at Syvas, 800 Armenians and ten Turks had been killed, and that according to official report a large body of Kurds were then approaching the city.

Mr. Jewett gave no details of the disorders, but the discrepancy in the figures show that the Turkish allegations that the Armenians were the aggressors are absolutely untrue, and that the Armenians were deliberately massacred.

Minister Terrell has also received a dispatch from Harpoot, a city of 100,000 inhabitants, and sixty miles west-northwest of the city of that name. The dispatch is dated November 12th and says that the lives of the occupants of four of the buildings burned at that place were saved and the occupants of eight other burned houses perished in the flames. The remaining houses were stripped of every article of value. The country in that vicinity, the dispatch says, is desolate and thousands of persons are homeless and destitute, in fact starving. The burned buildings, including missionary buildings, of which twelve were situated within the compound of Harpoot, and were occupied by twelve Armenian families and 500 theological students. A ladies' seminary is also within the enclosure.

A dispatch from Madrid in the pashalik of Diarbarkir, dated November 13th, says the inhabitants of the village burned in that vicinity are in the direct need of food and clothing and many are dying from starvation and exposure.

It is stated in dispatches from perfectly reliable authority that in the Syrian district of Gurdun, 4,000 men, women and children have been killed and many others are suffering from wounds and lack of medicines, food and clothing.

WHERE THE MONEY COMES FROM

To Aid the Insurgents in Carrying On Their Fight.

New York, November 16.—A special cablegram to the Times-Union from Havana says: "Advices received yesterday from Santa Clara say that important engagements are being fought near Chacabuco. The insurgents were dispersed. The Spanish forces were commanded by General Suarez."

The German steamer Teutonia, which arrived at Havana Thursday from Hamburg direct, brought an immense cargo of war material for the Spanish army, including 1,500,000 rounds of ammunition, and a bulk of which was immediately re-embarked for the port of Sagua la Grande on the same day.

"The Spanish government has created a flutter of excitement in this city, in official as well as civil circles. Fresh corps of volunteers are being hurriedly organized. COURTING BRADLEY

Joe Manley, of Maine, Drops in on Atlanta and the Kentuckian.

HE SEES LOCAL REPUBLICANS

But the Blue Grass Governor-Elect Conferred with Them.

MANLEY SUGGESTS REED AND BRADLEY

Georgia Republicans for McKinley. Tom Reed's Representation Is an Able Politician.

In the midst of all the pomp and ceremony attendant upon the visit of the various governors of the many great states to Atlanta during the past several days, there has been a by-play, which, though quietly carried on, is national in its character.

The principal actor in the side scene is said to have been Governor-elect Bradley, of Kentucky, who will in all probability be the next candidate for vice president of the United States on the republican ticket. As soon as it was known that he had carried the state for so long staunchly democratic his name was placed on the list of possibilities as the most available and most logical candidate for the vice presidency.

In his home town, where he has many friends both democratic and republican, it comes straight that he has been visited by friends of the more prominent presidential possibilities in the republican ranks.

It is well known that he has been seen by friends of Governor Morton, of New York, and Governor McKinley, of Ohio, and it is almost as certain that he has had a consultation with friends of Harrison, of Indiana, and with friends of Bradley, of Kentucky, who will in all probability be the next candidate for vice president of the United States on the republican ticket.

On last Thursday there came to the city, unaccompanied by a staff of colonels or a brass band, Hon. Joseph Manley, of Maine. Without taking the trouble to notify the newspapers of his presence in the city Mr. Manley quietly registered at the Hotel Grand.

It is supposed that on that same day Governor-elect Bradley, of Kentucky, reached the city. This was singular, to say the least. It is well-known that Mr. Manley, of Maine, is the right hand man of Mr. Thomas B. Reed, of Maine. Mr. Manley is the man who for many years tried to make James G. Blaine president.

It does not happen often that Kentucky goes republican. When it does get into that column it is because, so the politicians say, that the man is deserving, possesses personal popularity and is on the right line. With the long record of democratic victories before him, Governor-elect Bradley went into the fight to win. There have been many explanations of the result achieved. It is well-known that many of the goldbugs knifed the democratic candidate because he was a free silver man, and in that way Bradley's victory is accounted for.

However all that may be, a republican is to be Kentucky's next governor. This gives him power seldom held by a southern republican. So solid has the south been heretofore that both the candidates for the presidency and vice presidency have been selected from other portions of the country. This time, however, it is very nearly certain that the republican candidate for vice president will come from the state in which Abraham Lincoln was born.

The friends of Governor-elect Bradley say that he is too clever to form an alliance with any one just yet. They say that he will probably be accepted by all of the possibilities and that no matter whether it be Reed or McKinley or Harrison or Morton the other man on the ticket will be that of Bradley, governor-elect of Kentucky.

The nature of the conference between Manley and Bradley can only be surmised on the basis already given. That they did meet is given on authority that seems sufficient. What propositions may have been made is not known. But it is believed that the governor-elect Bradley and Manley are in the city.

From all that could be learned last night, there was more than one conference held with Governor-elect Bradley and that Colonel A. E. Buck, who is understood to have a leaning toward the gentleman from Ohio, called upon Kentucky's governor-elect and was in conference with him. The house was very strictly social and made for the purpose of congratulating Governor-elect Bradley.

Mr. Manley, it is said, also called upon Governor Hastings, of Pennsylvania, and that call brings to the front a lot of talk that has been quietly going on. It is claimed by the friends of Governor Hastings that if there is a failure to get one of the four principal candidates on the first ballot there will be a caucus and that the result will be that Governor Hastings will be selected to carry the banner of republicanism.

What a Fallow Townsman Says. A well-known townsman of Lancaster, Ky., was in Atlanta yesterday and the day before, and he knows something of the conferences that have been in progress since Governor-elect Bradley was given the republican majority, speaking of the situation, he said:

"I happen to know as a positive fact that Bradley has been visited by people who have come from the so-called presidential possibilities. He is sure to be on the next republican ticket as vice president."

"There is every reason why he should be. Kentucky is his and he carried it by a good majority. He has been the votes of the southern democrats and many of the votes of the goldbug democrats. He would throw Kentucky in line with the republicans in the fight for the presidency, thus adding a state to the list of those assured."

"There was some talk of H. Clay Evans for the vice presidency, but since the election of Bradley by the splendid majority I think Evans' chances have disappeared. With Tennessee so close to the republican line and Kentucky his own, Bradley might pull two or three southern states over and complete the landslide that seems to be trembling for a start. I feel quite certain."

that Bradley will be found with any combination that may be called and that he is what is termed a "cinch" for the vice presidency on the ticket the republicans will put out."

Governor Bradley Has Gone. Efforts were made to see Governor-elect Bradley, but he could not be located until a late hour, when it was stated that he was in his private car. He left last night at 11:45 o'clock.

COLT DIVORCE SUIT OFF.

The Colonel Will Give Mrs. Colt a Reasonable Sum.

Providence, R. I., November 16.—The divorce case brought by Mrs. Elizabeth W. Colt against Colonel Samuel Pomeroy Colt, president of the Industrial Trust Company, and leader of the rubber trust, was declared off today. The official announcement came from Francis Colwell, solicitor for Colonel Colt, this morning after a conference at 3 o'clock. A settlement in the matter will be made by friends of Mr. and Mrs. Colt.

Horace Barnes, of Bristol, will be chief arbitrator. The settlement will be at the terms of Colonel Colt entirely, owing to the collapse of the rubber trust, made by his wife in the petition for divorce. The suit against James J. Van Allen, the New York millionaire, for $200,000 for alienating his wife's affections will, in all probability, end with the divorce case. The closest friends of Colonel Colt here say that Van Allen was very sorry of the litigation against him and that he delayed his departure for Europe, expecting just such a situation as arose today in the Colt case. Colonel Colt is to give Mrs. Colt a reasonable allowance, but nothing like $125,000, which she demanded at one time when the Jackson episode was first brought to her attention.

The friends of the Colt family who are arranging the settlement are expected to arrive at a result in a very few days.

LUCY COBB DAY.

All Others Busy Preparing for This Important Event.

Athens, Ga., November 16.—(Special.)—This week everybody is active in the Lucy Cobb institute, all making ready for Lucy Cobb day. Committees are at work designing badges of blue and white; teachers are arranging programmes; others are addressing cards of invitation; some are practicing and some are speech making, so that the time of school hours is filled with busy work.

All connected with the school are bonding their best energies to make the day a success. The Seaboard Air-Line has granted the very low rate of $1.45 to the pupils, patrons and friends of the Lucy Cobb, with a limited ticket of ten days. This rate will induce hundreds to go up there that time. It is expected that Athens will be there in mass. This week there will be sent out cards of invitation to the pupils and patrons of the Lucy Cobb. The cards will read:

"Alumnus Reunion—Lucy Cobb Institute—Auditorium Hall, Friday Morning, November 23rd at 11 o'clock. The honor of your presence is requested."

No cards will be sent out in Athens, but through the columns of the daily papers, the entire town will be invited.

The 23rd of November is University day, and the 24th being Lucy Cobb day it is hoped and expected that the entire city will pay these two noble institutions the honor of attending the exposition in a body.

After the programme of exercises is rendered in the auditorium the ladies of the Lucy Cobb, the trustees and their wives and the alumnus will receive the friends and patrons of the school in the afternoon. In the woman's building, dainty refreshments will be served during the day,

Will Remain in Atlanta Until Thursday Night.

Following right on the heels of the splendid representative body of Cleveland, O., business men come over 100 members of the Toledo chamber of commerce to see the exposition tomorrow.
They come in a special train, rivaling in elegance the elegant train in which the wealthy Clevelandites traveled. They will reach Chattanooga early this morning and they will spend a quiet Sunday on the historic spots around Chattanooga and will leave tonight for Atlanta. They arrive tomorrow morning and will go at once to the exposition.

It is a distinguished gathering of representative business men. The party is headed by George E. B. Lewis, secretary of the Toledo chamber of commerce, and Charles H. Gates, ticket agent at Toledo.
The party will live in their elegant special train while in Atlanta. They will visit the exposition daily until Thursday night, when they leave for home. They return via the famous Mammoth cave in Kentucky and will reach Toledo one week from tomorrow. The party has outlined no special programme for their stay in Atlanta. The idea of each individual corner is to have a good time and this they will do. They will visit the exposition in a body and will probably have exercises of some kind in the auditorium Tuesday.
The mayor of Toledo and the president of the chamber of commerce will be in the party.

Many of the members of the Toledo delegation are well known in Atlanta and they will receive considerable attention while here.

Cleveland Men Go Home.
The big party of Cleveland business men left for home early yesterday morning in their special train of Wagner cars. The train was one of the finest that ever came south. Several of the cars were exhibited in the transportation building at the world's fair. They are all beauties. The members of the party were loath to leave the city. They have thoroughly enjoyed every minute of their stay here
and are immensely pleased with the exposition.

Louisville Men Still Here.
The Louisville board of trade is still in the city taking in the exposition. The delegation waited the exposition yesterday and participated in the exercises of Kentucky day. They will return to Louisville on their

A SWITCHMAN KILLED.
NICK ADKINSON CAUGHT BETWEEN THE CARS.
He Was Coupling Cars on the Western and Atlantic Road When His Coat Was Caught.

Nick Adkinson, a Western and Atlantic
switchman, was killed at the Simpson street crossing last night. He was coupling cars and was caught between the bumpers and crushed. He was moving to a meat store at the corner of Simpson and Marietta streets, and later was taken to the Grady hospital, where he died a few hours later.
Adkinson was twenty-eight years old.
He had been with the Western and Atlantic since 1880.
Adkinson's coat caught in the bumpers or he would have escaped all right. He fell to the track and the wheels passed over him. The train was drawn by engine 127, Nashville, Chattanooga and St.
Louis railroad, in charge of W. F. Hetzel.
No blame is attached to the engineer, as the affair was purely accidental. The injured man lived on Jet street and leaves a widow.

COLLEGE MEN COME

Tomorrow College Fraternity Men from the Entire Country Meet Here.

IT IS PAN-HELLENIC DAY

The Exercises Commence with a Congress Tomorrow Morning—Football in the Afternoon.

College colors will float from the breasts of five thousand college bred men in Atlanta tomorrow.
The college men from every quarter of the union are coming to Atlanta to participate in the exercises of Pan-Hellenic day and in the banquet that follows the day's exercises. Together with this vast army of college men will come many of the most prominent educators of the country, who will participate in the exercises.

The college men commenced arriving yesterday. At the Kimball and Aragon quite a number were registered last night. Today several hundred more are expected.
The committee on arrangements has an informal conference yesterday and completed
all the necessary preparations for the trip.
They feel sure that the day will be a memorable one.

The arrangements are under the superintendence of a local committee, of which Mr.
W. W. Davies, the well-known young attorney, is chairman. This committee was organized about a month ago and has been actively at work putting things in readiness for the great gathering of college men here tomorrow.

Started in Atlanta.
The idea of the Pan-Hellenic day originated among the local college men. They held a meeting, in obedience to a call issued by five or six young men of the city, and a very great interest was manifested among the fraternity residing in Atlanta. They immediately set about preparing for the celebration of the day in great shape. The executive board of the exposition gave the project instant and hearty encouragement.
The board set apart a day for the exercises in accordance with the request of the young men of the city and then the local committee commenced corresponding with the various college fraternities.

College Men All Favorites.
The local committee has been surprised with the wonderful unanimity with which the college men of the country have indorsed their plan. From nearly every college in the country has come the news that large delegations of college men are coming. From Athens there will be more than one hundred college men. A line of beer will come from Vanderbilt. Sewanee will send a great delegation from among its best members. Many prominent fraternity men, new well established in business and the professions, will be here. All the big colleges of the north and east will be here.
It will be one of the most notable gatherings of fraternity men that the country has seen in a long while.

The Congress Monday.
Monday morning from 10 to 12 the Pan-Hellenic congress will be held in the auditorium on the exposition grounds. W. W.
Davies, chairman of the local committee, will preside and introduce the speakers. A programme of very great interest has been prepared. Many of the leading educators of the country will speak on topics of vital and universal interest to the fraternities.
Many subjects will be touched upon and the morning will be one of the most interesting at the exposition.

Monday afternoon the college men will attend a grand game of football between the University of Georgia team and the team from Sewanee. This will be one of the most hotly contested fights on the gridiron that the country has seen in a long while.
After the football game the college men will repair to the Midway, where they will see all the queer shows to be seen on that cosmopolitan thoroughfare. They will visit the various attractions in both directions and will ring with college yells from beginning to end.

Banquet at the Kimball.
At 9:30 o'clock in the evening the brilliant college men's banquet will be held at the Kimball house. Covers will be laid for 300 guests. Manager Warren Leland, Jr., is bestirring himself to spread a royal feast before the college men. He will make it one of the greatest dinners that has been given in Atlanta.

Around the banquet board will be gathered many prominent gentlemen. Among the Atlanta men who will be present will be Dr.
I. S. Hopkins, Judge Howard Van Epps,
George T. Winston and others.
Mr. John Young Gardington will preside at the banquet and act as toastmaster. He will introduce the speakers, of whom there are many. The speeches will all be happy and to the point, as is assured by the list of those on the programme.

DINNER TO POOR BOYS.
Salvationists Will Dine the Newsboys and Bootblacks Thanksgiving Day.
The local Salvation Army will give a dinner to the poor boys of Atlanta on Thanksgiving day. The dinner will be given at the Salvation Army building on Marietta street. It will be in charge of Captain Hartman, of Atlanta.

Those who are expected to be present are the poor class of boys between the ages of six and sixteen. All bootblacks and newsboys will be invited. There will probably be an entertainment given to the boys also.
The dinner will be got up by contribution. Not only Salvationists, but other people will contribute to the dinner.

and keep it dry. There'll be no danger of its molding. But moisten the bread with water, and see the result. It is covered with mold. So with consumption. Its germs will not grow in the lungs unless everything is suitable to them. Weakness, poor
blood, loss of appetite,
coughs and colds often prepare the ground for the development of its germs. To destroy germ-life the system must be kept in a well-nourished condition. Do not lose flesh.

Take Scott's Emulsion,

preventive. It furnishes the reinforcements necessary for the body to conquer in the easiest possible form. The oil is in a state quickly taken up by the organs and tissues.

Cancer Can be Cured.

It is very often that the most insignificant symptoms are forerunners of the most violent disease. There is not a more destructive disease than Cancer, and in a majority of cases it is first indicated by a very small pimple or sore, to which no attention is attracted, until it before long develops into the most alarming conditions.

Here is another case where the first symptoms of a most violent Cancer were too small to receive much notice
until the disease had fully developed.
Mrs. Laura E. Mims has resided at Dawson, Georgia, five years, and is well known throughout the adjoining country. In a recent letter she tells of a wonderful case.

She says: A small pimple of a strawberry color appeared on my cheek; it soon changed to purple, and began to grow rapidly, notwithstanding all efforts to check it, until it was the size of a partridge egg. My eye became terribly inflamed, and was so swollen, that for quite a while I could not see. The doctors said I had Cancer of the most malignant type, and after exhausting their efforts without doing any good, they gave up the case as hopeless. When informed that my father had died from the same disease, they said I must die, as hereditary Cancer was incurable. I was terribly reduced in health, and felt as if my life was wasting away.

At this crisis, I was advised by a friend to try S. S. S., and in a short while the Cancer seemed more inflamed than before. I was informed that was favorable, however, as the medicine acts by forcing out the poison through the pores of the skin.

"Before long the Cancer began to discharge and continued to do so for three months; then it began to heal.
I continued the medicine a while longer, until the Cancer disappeared entirely, and I enjoyed better health than ever before. This has been several years ago and there has not been a sign of a return of the disease."

Cancer is becoming alarmingly prevalent, and manifests itself in such a variety of forms, that any sore or scab, it matters not how small, which does not readily heal up and disappear may well be regarded with suspicion.

The fact that S. S. S. (guaranteed purely vegetable) cures hereditary Cancer, which is considered incurable, places it without an equal as a sure cure for all manner of real blood diseases, such as Scrofula, Eczema, Contagious Blood Poison, or any other form of bad blood. Our treatise on Cancer and Blood Diseases will be mailed free to any address by Swift Specific Company, Atlanta, Georgia.

ATLANTA, GA., November 17, 1895.

The Constitution's Headquarters at the Exposition.

The Constitution is at home to its friends on the exposition grounds at its office on the north side of the grounds. It is located in front of the pretty grove of trees which stands at the foot of the big terrace stairway that leads from the Government building to the Manufacturers and Women's buildings. Representatives of both the business and news branches of the paper are constantly on duty in the building and will give a hearty welcome to all callers, whether on business or not. Telephone 516.

Georgia Day.

Next Tuesday, the 19th, will be Georgia day at the exposition! Preparations have been made to make it the biggest day of the season and all Georgia will be on deck. The people are coming from the mountains to the seaboard, and they are coming with a rush!

The railroads are offering the lowest rates ever known and it will be cheaper to come here than to stay at home.

The people of Georgia are right in manifesting such a lively interest in the exposition. Atlanta undertook this enterprise and carried it through, not for herself alone, but for Georgia and the entire south.

Within the past few weeks we have been visited by over twenty governors, by as many state press associations and by chambers of commerce from New York, Chicago, Boston, Louisville, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Philadelphia and nearly a score of prominent cities.

These visitors do not study Atlanta alone; they study Georgia and the south, and their capital and enterprise will be attracted to every community in Georgia and every southern state.

Our fellow citizens in Georgia are aware of these facts, and they are going to show their appreciation of the exposition's work by rallying here in force next Tuesday.

Georgia day will be a grand occasion, and every county will send immense crowds!

A Remarkable Editorial.

We reproduce in another column an editorial from The Chicago Chronicle which deserves a place among the curiosities of journalism.

The article is all the more remarkable when we consider the fact that The Chronicle is a democratic newspaper. Just why it should make the recent visit of the Chicagoans to Atlanta a theme for jests and gibes and sneers is a mystery.

The citizens who are ridiculed by The Chronicle are among Chicago's leading men, and in the solid business circles of the western metropolis they have no superiors. If the collector of the port, who shapes the policy of our Chicago contemporary and who is its editor in chief, finds something to amuse him in Peachtree street and in the cordial hospitality of the Atlantians it is all right. But it is in order to say that his flings against his public spirited fellow citizens who visited Atlanta on a mission which cannot fail to benefit both cities by bringing them into closer relations with each other are, to say the least, in very bad taste. The visitors from Chicago represented the very best elements of that city. They are broad-minded Americans and their freedom from sectionalism and old-time prejudices is in the highest degree commendable. They responded to Atlanta's hearty welcome in a fraternal spirit and not a word was uttered that was calculated to mar the harmony of the occasion. We do not know, nor do we care, whether any of them were at the front during the war. The fact that they are serving their country wisely and well at the present time and that they desire to cultivate our friendship is enough.

It may be that the collector of the port, who is trying the experiment of running a humorous daily in Chicago, merely intended to indulge in a little good-natured chaff, but it strikes us that he selected the wrong subject at the wrong time. Chicago was at her best here in Atlanta and her splendid delegation captured the city. If any of them lack a military record we feel confident that they can make one if it should ever be necessary.

The Coming Election.

On the first Wednesday in December our people will be called upon to elect two aldermen and seven councilmen.

We have omitted the usual primaries this year in order to avoid the excitement of a political campaign at a time when the interests of the exposition demanded the attention and the united support of our people. Everything has moved along quietly without any friction and we have had no contentions, no public caucuses and none of the customary features of a heated campaign.

Good citizens have announced their candidacy and their names are now before the people. There will be no primaries, no nominations to settle the matter. The election in December will decide the whole business.

Under the circumstances the citizens of Atlanta now stand face to face with a very important duty. The year following the exposition will be a period in which the benefits of our great fair will either be utilized or entirely lost. If we are to reap the fruits of the exposition and hold them we must place our very best men at the head of affairs and have a model city government. If, however, we are going to neglect our opportunities and let slip the advantages which we have gained, our city election becomes a matter of very little consequence.

Every thoughtful citizen must see that Atlanta is now the best advertised city in the union. The leading newspapers, capitalists and men of enterprise of every state are studying our resources, conditions and inducements. But it will require something besides a big show to attract them. They want to know something of the outlook. They want to know whether our municipal policy and methods indicate a future of progress and prosperity. The answer will be given at the coming election. If we elect our best men—men of known integrity and ability—every body at home and abroad will have confidence in our future.

This is no time for strife—for new issues and warring factions. It is a time when it is more than ever an imperative duty for us to pull together for Atlanta. We must stick to the old-time spirit of loyalty and harmony which in the past has, as a rule, placed the management of our affairs in the hands of wise and good men. "What can he and what will he do for Atlanta?" This should be the test in regard to every candidate. There are tried and true men whose names are before the public and every citizen should study them carefully and then make up his ticket with the interests of the city in view and without regard to mere personal likes and dislikes. No caucus or primary is needed this year. If a candidate's record is not tolerably well known he has no business in the race. We cannot afford any experiments. We want no unnecessary risks. It is an easy matter to look at the names before the people and pass upon their merits. If some of them are comparatively unknown—if the people cannot tell whether their past makes it certain that they will serve Atlanta to the best possible advantage, they should be dropped. To vote for such men would be taking a leap in the dark.

We take it for granted that all the men now in the field are good citizens, who really desire to put in their best work for the community in which they live, but some of them are men of superior ability and of well-known fidelity, and it goes without saying that these are the candidates who should be selected. They can easily be picked out. Our people are familiar with their records and their capacities.

Next year we must get together and go to work in earnest to make the most of the material benefits which should accrue from the exposition. We must cast the city's future upon broad lines, keeping in view the limitations of our conditions as well as the progress which we desire to encourage and actively aid. The men who are intrusted with the municipal affairs should be such men as we would choose to manage our business or administer our estates. They must be men of enterprise, judgment and experience—men who will command respect and confidence anywhere. They must not be tangled up with factions and doubtful issues. They must be for Atlanta, first, last and all the time.

We have such men among us—men who are in touch with the people and who so thoroughly understand what the exposition is doing for the city that they know how to make its lessons materialize in the shape of the Greater Atlanta, which is even now ready to leap forward with her forehead touched with the dawning light of the twentieth century. These men are of no faction and in sympathy with no faction. They have no part in ordinary rivalries and wrangles. Their ambition is to aid in the building up of a great city, which will double our present population and capital in the course of a few years—a city of great enterprises which will give liberal employment to our labor and boundless opportunities to capital and enterprise. These are the men who should conduct our municipal government, and they should be picked out and elected. The first thing for every citizen to do is to qualify himself for voting by registering. Then let him make up his ticket in the manner here suggested. See that there is not a doubtful name on it. After this only one more thing remains to be done. Vote for your ticket and work for it!

The Gold Movement.

As might be expected the outflow of gold is attracting the attention usually bestowed upon it and giving birth to numerous theories, some plausible and some foolish, but most of them wide of the mark.

The gold reserve is now below the ninety million mark and it is probable that another issue of bonds will be made before congress meets, or shortly thereafter. The New York Journal of Commerce is inclined to view the situation with alarm, since it knows that the single gold standard is on trial and that another issue of bonds will not only remedy matters but will have an absolute tendency to irritate and disgust the honest voters of the country who have to foot the bills.

On the other hand, The New York World says the situation is "inconvenient" and even "unfortunate," but it sees no reason "to regard it as alarming." Doctors will differ, even the quacks of finance and the school-pigeons of the gold speculators will not concur to the rule, so that whoever desires to find out why gold is going out when it ought to be coming in has only to read the metropolitan and eastern newspapers and choose for his own one of the thousand different reasons that he will find pressed on his attention.

The most important thing for the taxpayers to consider is the fact that, while gold is going out, no bond issue would be necessary if the administration had not violated the letter and spirit of the law and made gold the only money of redemption.

It is no doubt true that if gold were now refused to those who demand it it would go to a premium. But what then? Would the people—the producers—or even the importers and exporters, be hurt by a premium on gold? Certainly not. For many years after the war there was a considerable premium on gold, but the people prospered, business prospered, new industries were established and hundreds of thousands of miles of new railway were built.

It is far better for business men, railroads and the people that there should be a premium on gold than that there should be another issue of bonds, for it will come to one or the other at last, and it is far better that the interests of the people should be consulted than that they should be systematically robbed by unlawful bond issues intended to keep up the fictitious gold value.

The east, possibly, is not in a position to appreciate the fact that the people will not welcome another bond issue, but it must be apparent to all close observers that the single gold standard is breaking down of its own weight. The bond-issuing industry will have to come to an end after awhile, and then what? The more bonds we put out the less gold we have to show for it and at last there will be a premium on gold. This is, in the nature of things, inevitable.

Why Not Send Him to St. Helena?

The other day 500 Armenians were slaughtered at Erzerum and now we have tidings of the destruction of the American mission at Kharpout and the massacre of 800 Christians.

These barbarous outrages are becoming an every-day occurrence and it is time for the Christian world to combine against the unspeakable Turk.

What shall be done with the sultan? This is the absorbing question in Europe just now and it is given the papers considerable trouble. If the Turkish ruler is driven from Europe and stripped of most of his dominions, it will not be safe to allow him to establish his headquarters in any locality where there are Christian residents, because he will be sure to continue his policy of persecution. It was once thought that he might be permitted to retire to Broussa, the old capital of the Ottoman, where he might rule the peninsula of Anatolia, but as that territory contains many Armenian and Greek Christians it is to be feared that they would be sacrificed.

The sultan cannot go to Arabia, because in that country his claims to caliph authority are disputed, and in Tripoli he would be opposed by the men of his own faith who have always repudiated the spiritual authority of the despot at Constantinople.

Where, then, can this royal monster go with any assurance of safety for himself and for his Christian subjects? England is not willing to place him among her 50,000,000 Mohammedans in India, the czar does not want him in Central Asia, Austria would not tolerate him in Bosnia or Herzegovina and France would not give him much of a showing in Algeria.

If the powers give him an income and a small kingdom, repeating their experiment with Napoleon at Elba, the exiled monarch might make trouble some day. Why not send him to St. Helena? That lone rock in the sea was considered good enough for Napoleon after Waterloo, and it is certainly a fit place for the arch-enemy of Christendom. By all means let it be St. Helena!

How It Works.

The public was notified through our press reports, published on the 13th instant, that cotton must decline because the Liverpool merchants had notified Wall street that unless it did this would be compelled to export gold from this country. This notification has been followed by the decline of cotton since that time from $\frac{1}{4}$ to $\frac{3}{4}$ cents per pound.

What better argument do we need to show the dangerous working of the gold standard?

If England can by the simple threat of withdrawing gold affect our markets in this way why is it not in her power to regulate in the same way the prices of all our staple products? We have insisted all the time that she could. Here is a plain admission on the part of the people who are in sympathy with the English idea of the gold standard that they are doing just what we have charged. This is just what we may expect from the gold standard, and the more we examine it and see its workings the more defects we find developed even by the admission of its friends.

When Europe finally saddles the gold standard on America, it will not only regulate the price of our products but the price of our labor.

The South and the Exposition.

The exposition is now scoring a great success. Every day adds to the crowds that seek instruction and amusement within its gates. Visitors who have gone away have constituted themselves walking advertisements of the wonderful show and have spread its fame far and wide.

But still there seems to be something lacking. People from the north, east and west crowd our streets and make gay the winding and picturesque avenues of the exposition grounds; but somehow the people of the south have failed to discover that they have here an exposition of the wonders and curiosities of the various nations, accented only by the world's fair, and a display of the marvelous resources of the earth and its own land that has never been approached in its completeness.

This is the testimony of all competent judges who have visited the exposition. We make no allusion whatever to the amusement features of the show. Some of these are peculiar enough; but they are the things of the hour, to be seen to-day and forgotten tomorrow, except by the frivolous minded, who will remember them in order to make their neighbors gaze. The exposition proper has been arranged with an eye to attracting the attention of those who have serious notions of the business of life.

This view has been carried out even in the art building, where Mr. Bradley, instead of gathering together a series of the great masterpieces of painting, has arranged a display so as to give the average spectator some idea of the present condition of American art. There are masterpieces from both native and foreign painters. But the pictures have been selected and arranged with an eye to producing educational results. This fact might not strike the casual observer, but it is bound to leave an impression on those who understand that knowledge is useless unless it serves to enlarge the mind.

But the art department, if it is not the highest, is only one phase of the great exposition. What that department is on a small scale the whole exposition is on a large scale. A most distinguished educator has described it as an immense university, having the advantage of the average institution in this, that while ideas in the latter are imparted by means of text-books and lectures, in the great exposition they are imparted by the facts themselves.

Now, an idea that is based on a fact—that springs from something fixed and concrete—is of vastly more importance than one that lodges in the mind by hearsay. We do not say that a mere dry bundle of facts is more important than other things in enlarging and liberalizing the mind, but we do say that a fact which is new and interesting and important breeds in the mind ideas and suggestions that are often more significant than the facts themselves.

This process may be called the highest kind of education, on a level, indeed, with that imparted by the universities. After all, education is but another name for experience, and this is why so many men, otherwise level-headed, insist that what is technically called a college education is not necessary to success in life. It is not absolutely necessary, but how firm a hold does a right mind rightly educated take on the affairs of life when it comes to grapple with them?

We have the testimony of President Gilman, of Johns Hopkins University, and the jury of awards, that the exposition is in the highest and best sense educative. He has advised the teachers of schools far and near to bring their pupils here, and when that course is inadvisable to advise them to come, so that they may be brought in contact with this vast series of object lessons—this marvelous museum of art, invention, business and progress.

Now, what would be wholesome and profitable to the teachers and pupils of schools advantageously situated would be just as wholesome and as profitable to those who have small opportunity for travel and whose children may never have the advantages of what is called the higher education. Within the gates of the exposition there has been gathered together a most stupendous collection of exhibits that cannot fail to instruct and enlarge the minds of both old and young.

To many in the south it affords the opportunity of a lifetime. Leaving altogether out of view the amusement features, however attractive these may be after their kind, there is not an exhibit on the grounds that will not convey some sort of useful knowledge and information to those who are in search of these important adjuncts of life. As we have said, the exposition is a vast object-lesson and does for the minds of the young what the electric current does for telegraphic messages; it puts there at once without the need of years of observation and study.

Under these circumstances we should be sorry to know that any large number of southern people had failed to take advantage of this great opportunity to educate themselves and their children by visiting the exposition. We are not moved to write this on account of the lack of attendance. The crowds that daily enter the gates are entirely satisfactory as to numbers, and are growing larger and larger day by day. There is no complaint on that score. Our only fear is that the people of the south may fail to appreciate the importance of the exposition as an educational institution.

If there were to be a permanent affair, it would be no urgency in the matter. But it is temporary. In the course of a few weeks the great show will be dismantled and the exhibits dispersed, and we may well suppose that a generation will pass away before we have such a wonderful display of the world's results of genius and industry.

A Discordant Note.

At a public meeting in Boston, held last Tuesday to protest against lynchings in various states for the crime of rape, the following resolution was adopted:

The heartless, bloodthirsty disregard of the supreme law of the land must cease. Mass-charges declares it. She calls upon all lovers of law and order to rise in their might and majesty and say amen to the declaration. She takes no part in the rancor that the negro race is more immoral than the other races; that they are rapists. It is her firm conviction that the charge is false, and that it is manufactured to appeal to a sentiment calculated to cover up and palliate to a great extent the burning alive of black men—the real design being concealed, which is to crush the lawful, growing aspiration manifesting itself among black men.

The Nashville Christian Advocate recently published some statistics which showed that the felonious assaults of black men upon white women are increasing in the south and run up into the hundreds every year. These Boston people, however, with no knowledge whatever of the subject, solemnly declare in sweeping terms their belief that the negroes are innocent of the crime for which some of them are lynched in the south and elsewhere.

Were such a declaration as is made in the extract quoted above to emanate from a responsible source no language would be strong enough for its denunciation. But, of course, we do not for a moment suppose that this meeting represented Massachusetts or Boston. It was doubtless composed of a few cranks and south-haters, who have no standing at home. We have yet to meet with a respectable white man from the north or from any foreign country who claims that southerners or any others trump up the charge of rape against the blacks and lynch them as a punishment for their "lawful, growing aspiration," whatever that may mean.

However, nature is the same everywhere. It has blazed out at Port Jervis, N. Y., in Ohio, and in Indiana and Illinois, where negroes have been lynched for the same crime which sometimes causes them to be lynched in the south. The Boston meeting is more remarkable for its folly than for anything else. The south is gradually suppressing the lynching evil, but the surest way to get rid of lynching is to get rid of the provocation. We hope some day to hear of a meeting in Boston which will advise the offenders—white or black—to keep their hands off defenseless women. Such advice followed to the letter will wipe out the lynching evil forever.

The Law and the People.

Modern reformers seem to think that they can make people moral by statute.

This is where they make their fatal mistake. Good laws will not take the place of personal virtue. Good people need good laws, but the laws need good people to uphold them. Laws do not execute themselves; they do not make men virtuous; they do not extirpate evil. "It is not the glittering weapon that fights the battle, but the hero's heart."

As a Christian and a civilized people we need laws which are the perfection of wisdom and justice. But back of these statutes we must have a majority of good people who are eager to stand by the right for the sake of the right, and not merely because it is a legal duty.

We need laws against murder and theft, but we need, still more, people who are honest and who will do violence to their neighbor. We need laws that will punish just, greed and intemperance, but we are more in need of people who are virtuous, unselfish and sober. A law against the hip-pocket pistol is a good thing, but it is much better to have citizens who are not willing to carry a pistol secretly. It is our duty to pass laws against the enemies of society, but our main work should be to educate the people up to the point where they will all be the allies of society and the natural lovers of peace, law and order.

By all means, let us continue to perfect our system of laws, but let us pay more attention to the education of the masses. Surely, with the mighty agencies of the pulpit, the press and our enlightened reformers and school masters, it should be possible to make the next generation a God-fearing and God-serving people. The law is great and should prevail, but there is more in the people than in the law. Get the hearts of the people right, and fewer laws, judges, sheriffs and jails will be needed.

Our Interests in Colombia.

In this issue will be found a letter from Mr. Frederick Leslie Rockwood, of Bogotá, United States of Colombia, which is full of significant and suggestive points.

Mr. Rockwood is confident that if our manufacturers and merchants will go to work in the right way they can secure the trade of Colombia. Our cotton and woolen goods and other manufactured products are better than those imported from Europe. The people desire to trade with us. They are not on good terms with England, and they are not well satisfied with the course of France and Germany.

The Americans would sweep the field in Colombia and other South American countries if they would send out efficient representatives, and adapt themselves to the trade conditions of those regions. Unfortunately, Mr. Rockwood says, some of our consular representatives are not doing us any good in a business way. At Bogotá, for instance, a British subject, connected with an importing house, with a partner in England, is our vice consul general, and at present acting consul general. The death or absence of our minister would make him acting minister. This official may be irreproachable in every way, but it is plain that it is bad policy on our part to represent a British subject whose interests are in direct conflict with our own. Such appointments are objectionable upon principle.

Our consular agents in South America should be Americans, and they should be able to look after our commercial interests. Possibly we have other consular agents who are foreign subjects. The matter is worth looking into.

If republican victories are really calculated to vindicate a democratic administration, it is easy to see why members of the cabinet are touting for a third term.

The fine weather makes big crowds at the exposition.

The talk about high prices in Atlanta is all moonshine. Board and lodging were never cheaper than they are today. The town has steadied itself to taking care of the crowds, and there is now no complaint from any source.

Every man who has bright children should bring them to the exposition. They will receive impressions that will be more valuable and lasting than anything they can get in school.

Mr. Tom Reed may burst his own boom with his ravel.

Atlanta wants to see more of Chicago.

New England takes to our exposition as naturally as a duck to water. New England knows a good thing.

When Atlanta surprises herself you may know there's something huge and unexpected in sight, and yet Atlanta was and is surprised at the extent and beauty of her exposition.

EDITORIAL COMMENT.

Walter Besant is authority for the statement that there are fifty novelists in England who have incomes of $5,000 a year or over. If this is so the Grub street days of English literature have departed. For the reason that so many American writers are endeavoring to make permanent homes for themselves in London.

The following story, showing General Robert E. Lee's magnanimity, is told. Early in the war he had proved his pre-eminence as a general, he was severely criticised on more than one occasion by General Whiting. Whiting had stood at the head of his class at West Point, and was considered a brave and capable man. One day President Davis, wishing an officer for some important command, called upon General Lee for advice. "What do you think of Whiting?" asked Davis. Lee answered without hesitation, commending Whiting as one of the ablest men in the army, well qualified in every way for even the most responsible place. One of the officers present was greatly surprised, and at the first opportunity drew Lee aside. "Don't you know what unkind things Whiting has been saying about you?" he inquired. Lee's answer was of the best. "I understood," he said, "that the president desired to know my opinion of Whiting, not Whiting's opinion of me."

The gentleman who has been figuring prominently in New York as Dr. Forbes Winslow, the distinguished English expert on mental diseases, got taken down a peg in the courts there the other day. He was summoned by the state in a murder trial now in progress there to show that the defendant was insane when he committed the murder, and his testimony to that effect was very emphatic. When the distinguished expert was taken in hand by the cross-examiner, however, he had to confess that his name was not Forbes Winslow, but that he was not a physician, and that he was sailing around on his father's reputation. He retired from the case a wiser man.

Patriots on Peachtree Street.

Yes, sah, in the language, sah, of a distinguished soldier of Georgia, sah, "The Southern Military Gentlemen and Patriots Cordially Greet the Outriggered Chivalry of the Soldier Boys from Chicago," sah.

Quite a number of the boys from Chicago, all of them robust and lusty youths at the time of the war of the rebellion, are now marching through Georgia for the first time. They are just boiling over with tenderness toward their southern brother. They never had the luxury of his acquaintance at the time when he bore a rifle in his hands and had at its highest activity that uncomfortable vocal expression of his indignation, "You're a damned traitor!" Our Chicago friends of fifty years or thereabout are gushing at Atlanta over the valor of their erstwhile rebel foes and assuring them in the most courteous and respectful language of their total and unreserved forgiveness and their now undying affection. Bless the gallant old veterans!

Ferd W. Fock is down there and no one is more gushing. Ferd during the war of the rebellion could not spare the time to follow the flag.

Mr. Bryan is exerting at Atlanta that splendid eloquence for which he is renowned, but during the war of the rebellion Colonel Bryan did yeoman service in the Chicago sanitary commission, and he never heard his breast to the southern gentlemen, sah, who at that time, sah, had guns in their hands, sah.

By all means, let us continue to perfect our system of laws, but let us pay more attention to the education of the masses. Surely, with the mighty agencies of the pulpit, the press and our enlightened reformers and school masters, it should be possible to make the next generation a God-fearing and God-serving people. Sangre de Christo.

(On the Painting, "Memories of Mexico" by W. H. Miller, Cor. Atlanta) The mountains flare in the sunset glow. Each peak sheds a crimson glow. Where the travelers' hands are clasped in prayer.

On the desolate plain below. On the desolate plain where the sun-drawn rain.

In days of long ago.

As days when the mail-clad warriors, marching through storm and flood, Saw peak on peak, like a blazing star. And cried: "Behold the Christ—His blood! And kneeling there, in the twilight air, In the red, down-streaming flood,

Worshipped, and wept, and prayed to God For the sinners of their souls, and made Altars to heaven from the burning sod. Bright as a warrior's blade, And there they dreamed while the glory streamed—

And there they wept and prayed.

"Sangre de Christo" . . . The journey done, There like a blazing gem The cross, in the light of the dying sun, Shone over the souls of them!

With the nails in the sweet and the beautiful feet Of the Lord of Bethlehem!

"Sangre de Christo" . . . When life's way Is ended for us—how sweet To find God's smile in the fading day— With Christ on the mount to meet! And in heaven's bright gleams read to glorious dreams

AFTER THE SCALPER

Meeting of the Railroad Committee of the House Held Yesterday.

TICKET SCALPERS WERE HEARD

Mr. Comer Spoke on Behalf of the Railroads. Mr. Smith Represented the Drummers.

At the meeting of the railroad committee of the house of representatives of the Georgia legislature yesterday there was a stirring debate over the bill now pending before the house providing for the abolition of the business of ticket brokers in the state.

The debate was participated in by all the parties at interest.

Hon. Charlton Battle, of Muscogee, chairman of the committee, called the session to order yesterday morning in room 24 on the third floor of the statehouse and there were present a full attendance of the railroad committee, many prominent men, commercial travelers and ticket brokers.

All sides were given a hearing by the committee.

The bill that is exciting such interest and concern before the railroad committee is that introduced by Representative Houston, of DeKalb, and amended by Representative Branam, of Fulton.

The original bill was for the purpose of preventing the business of the ticket scalper in the state. It provided that nobody should be allowed to engage in the business of selling railroad tickets in this state, except the railroad over which the tickets were sold. The bill stipulated that each railroad should have its ticket agents post a certificate from the state in their office stating that they were authorized to deal in railroad tickets and that no person besides these ticket agents should be allowed to deal in railroad tickets.

There were other stipulations of the bill pertaining to the methods by which the law should operate, with a special reference to the feasibility of such a law.

The amendment which Mr. Branam, of Fulton, tacked on the bill, or rather the substitute offered, has the same stipulation, but goes further to provide for the requirements of all railroads that they shall put on sale mileage books for 1,000 and 5,000 miles. This is specially intended to benefit the traveling salesmen of the state who travel considerably over the railroads and who demand a special rate.

In regard to the clause of the bill providing for the abolition of ticket scalping in Georgia there is a great deal of excitement just at present in the camps of the ticket scalpers who have flocked to Atlanta since the exposition opened a few weeks ago.

The American Ticket Broker's Association has taken a lively hand in the movement and were represented yesterday by President G. M. McKinley, of Chicago, who appeared before the railroad committee of the house and made a strong speech on behalf of the ticket brokers of the country. He said that the American Ticket Broker's Association was founded upon equitable principles and that their business was as holy and as righteous as any other business on earth. He endeavored to show to the committee that the bill, if passed, would seriously hurt the passenger traffic of the south. He said that in many instances the railroads are known to encourage the ticket broker's trade by putting on sale with them a number of tickets. While this may be done chiefly by the weaker lines in their attacks on the stronger lines, he said that it was a great help to the people of a section, giving a better class cheap transportation which they would not otherwise get.

Mr. E. E. Smith on behalf of the Commercial Traveler's organization made a forceful argument in favor of the cause of the bill, reviving railroads to sell mileage books to drummers and others. He said that railroads in other sections have tried this plan with good results and he thought the railroads of Georgia might do likewise.

Mr. Smith argued that the man who does a great deal of traveling ought to have some concession from the railroads, particularly if his line of business was such as tended to the enlargement of trade and commerce, thus bringing more business to the railroads. His speech was loudly praised by many members of the committee.

Mr. Comer for the Roads.
Mr. H. H. Comer, president of the Central of Georgia railroad company, made a strong speech on behalf of the railroads of the state. He favored the passage of the bill to prevent scalping in the state, but argued against the clause of the measure requiring railroads to issue mileage books at reduced rates.

Mr. Comer presented a strong argument on behalf of the railroads. He showed that the ticket scalping business on its face was a wrongful trade. He argued that it was a fraudulent business in its entirety. He said the railroads of the state of Georgia would be in position many times to offer low passenger excursion rates when they don't offer them if it were not for the nefarious and wrongful practices of the ticket scalpers. He said when the roads do offer cheap return tickets, the scalpers thrive on them and cut up the benefits to the road of increased traffic by getting an inroad into the regular business of the railroad, which might have been kept up at regular rates. To illustrate, he said a man in New York who wanted to come to Macon on important business would get a cheap excursion ticket to Atlanta at about half the price to Macon, sell the ticket in Atlanta to a scalper, then buy a scalper's ticket to Macon and returning to Atlanta buy a scalper's ticket to New York. That man may never have stopped in Atlanta to see the exposition and yet he has beat his way over the entire trip at a wondrously low cost of transportation. In this way the railroad originally intending to do the exposition good has done itself a great deal of harm through the imposition of the ticket scalper, and has really in such cases done the passenger no good at all.

Mr. Comer ventured the prediction that unless the legislature passed some such law to prevent ticket scalping in Georgia, the railroads would not in the future be willing to grant as many cheap excursion rates as they might have had with some such protection.

Colonel John Candler, attorney for the ticket broker's association, made a telling speech setting forth their claims in the matter.

The meeting was fully attended and was very interesting. Nearly all of the railroads had representatives there.

A Card.

Will you allow me through your paper to correct an error in an article of last Sunday's issue in which my name was used in connection with the "Hygienic Institute." I cannot account too much praise to that institution for the methods used in the treatment of my pulmonary trouble, and gladly commend it to any afflicted. I know whereof I speak, for it is due alone to that treatment that I am with my family today. I am entirely recovered and growing stronger, but I am not keeping a boarding house and could not do so if I desired. Respectfully, MRS. WILLIAM E. HOYLE.

BISHOP KEENER HERE

He is on His Way to the Conference at Elberton, Ga.

HE PREACHES TWICE TODAY

Important Changes To Be Made—Drs. Robins, Kendall and Brinsfield Have Served Four Years.

The annual session of the North Georgia conference will convene at Elberton, Ga., next Wednesday, and several important changes will be made in the Methodist ministry of this city.

Dr. J. B. Hopkins, the pastor of the First Methodist church, in all probability, preached his last sermon as the pastor of that church last Sunday morning. The limit of pastoral service under the regulations of the North Georgia conference is four years. Dr. Hopkins has already served for this length of time, and, in consequence of this fact, he will not be returned.

When Dr. Hopkins was called to the pulpit of Trinity Methodist church last summer he accepted the charge with the understanding that a pastor would be named by the conference this month. He felt that his duties as president of the Technological school would not allow him to serve the church except for a brief term of months, pending the action of the general conference at Elberton.

Dr. Hopkins has made a faithful pastor and has filled the pulpit not only to the satisfaction of the congregation, but to the admiration of the best interests of the church. The members of the congregation will regret to part with Dr. Hopkins, and they will give him up with very great reluctance.

The same may be said of Dr. Robins. During the four years of his pastorate the membership of the First Methodist church has been considerably increased. By his eloquence in the pulpit and his earnest leadership Dr. Robins has endeared himself to every member of his congregation and made a reputation second to that of no minister of his denomination in this state.

In addition to these important changes several others will be made. Dr. T. R.

Chamberlin, Johnson & Co.

Kendall has served as the pastor of the Boulevard church for four years and his sermon today will close his pastoral service. Since Dr. Kendall was sent to this church four years ago the membership has almost trebled, and it ranks today as one of the most active and influential churches in the city.

Rev. J. H. Eakes, the pastor of Walker street Methodist church, and Rev. W. W. Brinsfield, the pastor of St. Paul's church, may also be transferred to other charges. No changes will likely be made in the presiding elders. Dr. John W. Heldt is the presiding elder of the North Atlanta district and Dr. W. F. Cook is the presiding elder of the South Atlanta district.

Bishop Keener is Here.

Bishop John C. Keener, the oldest member of the college of bishops, is in Atlanta on his way to Elberton.

PROVES A SUCCESS

The Cotton Gin at the Exposition Is a Great Invention.

IT EXCITES MUCH INTEREST

It Is in Operation Every Day During the Exposition and Is Watched by Many.

Away over behind the manufactures building, in the hollow, is a cotton field. That cotton field was planted by the exposition for the purpose of exhibiting a machine which seems to be successfully accomplishing what has been almost universally declared to be impossible. Of course, there is almost no such thing as an impossibility, though anything can be proved so. This machine behind the manufactures building is picking cotton, and picking it to the entire satisfaction of the people who see it. It is attracting a great deal of attention, probably one hundred and fifty people visiting it every day. The directors want it moved up near the agricultural building, where it can be easily seen and be within the reach of the hundreds of cotton planters who can hardly believe that such a thing can be done. As it is now located it is necessary to go to the east end of the electricity building and climb down a steep flight of steps to the ravine, cross a small bridge and pass through a little clump of trees to the cotton field. The machine now is, the field is a typical cotton field, and the machine is practically where it will do the field work, while if it were in a special case, it would be a great deal of trouble in the minds of the exhibitors to its ability to work in the field.

The curious part of the whole matter is that a Canadian has conceived and executed the idea of this successful cotton picker. Perhaps it is best, for the inventor, not knowing the traditions of the cotton field, was unhampered, and worked only from the possibilities of the mechanical end. He saw that under existing conditions, not only was it difficult to harvest the cotton crop before rains commenced, but that when it was harvested, it sold at so low a price that the profits were quite eaten up. So he endeavored to get a machine which would pick cotton, pick it clean, and at the same time injure neither the plant nor the buds, blossoms, squares or green bolls. According to the testimony of the people who have seen it, and who have written on the book at the field their opinions, the machine accomplishes all this, and picks cotton equal to the best hand picking.

Some of the testimonials are from the best known cotton planters in the south, and read very interestingly. One man from Mississippi says: "It is the grandest of inventions." Another says that "the machine does what is claimed for it, and the cotton picked is equal to the best hand picked." The testimonials are all favorable, and the surprise of the men who have seen it is great.

The inventor claims that the machine will do the work of forty pickers. It requires two men and two mules, though the two men can be reduced to six if four machines are used, as one of them is merely to attend to the removal of the cotton from the machine. The machine is a stationary in the plant, revolving at the same time, until the machine has passed its length, when they are withdrawn, carrying with them 50 per cent of the cotton on the plant. The cotton is not injured in the least, and is cleanly lifted out of the bolls, without the trash which a good, fast picker will almost inevitably get.

It seems to be the opinion of the planters who have seen the machine at work that it is an invention of equal importance with the cotton gin, and that it will revolutionize the cotton industry. Mr. Campbell, the inventor, says that the machine is almost ready for the market. He has been at work on it for a number of years and has watched the numerous cotton pickers which have been made, from time to time, placed before the public. There was always a great defect, however, in each one. One would injure the green bolls; another would thresh the leaves to shreds, and still another pulled shucks and all into the picked cotton.

If the work that this machine is doing in the field on the exposition grounds is satisfactory, then the machine is a success for the field is a typical cotton field, and is an average growth of cotton. The opinions of all who have seen it are the same. They say that it is a successful cotton picker for average upland cotton, and that seems to be about all that can be desired.

The secretary of the company is at the grounds every day at 3 o'clock, and he says that the crowds increase every time the machine is operated, and that their surprise is great, though after they have seen the machine work, it is with perfect willingness that they say it is a successful machine. The operation was witnessed by a Constitution representative a few days ago, and the enthusiasm was evidently real.

CONCERT THIS AFTERNOON.

Last To Be Given at the Grand by the Mexican Band.

This afternoon at 3:30 o'clock the great Mexican band which has achieved so much popularity since its arrival in Atlanta, will give the last of their series of concerts at the palatial Grand opera house.

This noted musical organization, under the direction of Conductor Ricardo Pacheco, has reached a high standard of excellence, and in certain classes of music stands, probably, without a peer. This is especially true of the dreamy waltzes of Mexico, and it is, indeed, a rare treat to hear this band play such selections as La Paloma.

This will positively be the last of these Sunday afternoon concerts at the Grand by the Mexican band and an extremely attractive program has been arranged for the occasion. The Grand will doubtless be filled this afternoon.

Following is the programme:

PART FIRST.

Overture—"Mignone"—Thomas.

"La Macanalis" Oboe Concert—Garmond.

Soloist, Bernardo Manzano.

Waltz—"The King's Guard"—Godofray.

Conductor, Leon Munoz.

PART SECOND.

Piano Solo—Variations—"Il Barbiere di Seville"—Smith—Anna Maria Sanchez, the champion child pianist of the world.

Violin Solo—"Legende"—Wienawski.

Mario Sandoz, Laing, assisted at the piano by Mrs. M. M. de Sancha.

PART THIRD.

Overture—"Ray"—Mendelssohn.

"Sonambulo"—Clarinet concert—Belini.

Soloist, Luis Espana.

Variations—"Paloma"—Jose Dolores.

Asteca—Piano soloist, Manuel Rosas.

CHARLES E. LOUIS, DRAMATIST.

Something About the Author of Russell's Curtain Raiser.

Mr. Charles E. Louis, of Montgomery, Ala., is a young man who has a brilliant future in the dramatic world. His first play to be produced was "Mr. Valentine's Christmas Supper," played by Mr. St. Smith Russell for the first time at the Grand in this city.

Though Mr. Louis was born in Ohio he has spent most of his life in the south and has been identified with this section and its interests so long that he calls himself with pride a southerner. He has traveled extensively. For years he has aspired to playwrighting and has devoted himself for a number of years in connection with his mercantile avocation to the attainment of that ideal in a quiet way, accumulating material, studying the drama in its entirety and the demands of the stage and preparing himself for the best work.

He thinks simple plots make the best plays; works to climaxes steadily and strongly and often ends with startling though consistent surprises. Unlike many of her modern dramatists he believes a play should point a moral and furnish afterthought. A play that ends when the curtain drops has not accomplished its highest purpose. Entertainment for the time and wholesome reflection when it is over are the best combinations.

"Mr. Valentine's Christmas Supper," now in Mr. Russell's repertoire, while only an exquisite trifle, is a play that brings reflection, a pleasing aftermath. It grows on one, and though presented in a quiet artistic vein holds the attention for the time.

The suggestion was derived from a drawing and sketch in Christmas Life, of 1893, and read very interestingly. One man from Mississippi says: "It is the grandest of inventions." Another says that "the machine does what is claimed for it, and the cotton picked is equal to the best hand picked." The testimonials are all favorable, and the surprise of the men who have seen it is great.

The inventor claims that the machine will do the work of forty pickers. THE INJUNCTION GRANTED.

St. Paul, Minn., November 16.—Judge Kelly this morning filed a decision in the Great Northern-Pacific case granting the injunction restraining the consolidation of the two roads.

NEWS OF THE WEEK AND GOSSIP OF SOCIETY.

At Asbury Methodist church on Tuesday evening, November 12th, Miss Agnes V. Lewis and Mr. Alfred E. Kelley were united in marriage. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. H. Eades, assisted by Rev. W. O. Cotter.

Miss Lewis is the daughter of Mrs. Eleanor Lewis, of this city, and is a young lady of many accomplishments. Her sweet disposition and winning ways have won for her a large circle of friends. Mr. Kelley is one of the most promising young business men of this city, and his many friends congratulate him on winning such a lovely bride.

Mr. and Mrs. Kelley are at home to their friends at 81 Woodward avenue.

Mrs. Susan Deane Harwood has issued formal announcements of the marriage of her daughter, Miss Francis Harwood, to Mr. Arthur Middleton Gibbs. The wedding occurred on Monday, November 11th, at the residence of Mrs. Harwood, Idlehurst, Marietta. Miss Harwood is one of the most charming members of the younger set of Atlanta society, and has been the most popular since she made her debut. Mr. Gibbs is a prominent citizen of Savannah.

A quiet, but happy marriage was solemnized on last Wednesday evening, November 14th, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. McKee at Vinland Station, when their daughter, Pearl, was united to Dr. O. M. Alexander, of Smyrna. The Rev. Mr. Wright officiating. The bride is one of the most charming young ladies of that section of country, while the groom is a rising young physician and highly esteemed by all who know him. The many friends of Dr. and Mrs. Alexander wish them much joy and happiness together.

Sunday, November 16th, at high noon, Mr. C. B. Griggs, of Dawson, Ga., and Miss Mattie Clarke, of this city, were married. Rev. W. J. Cotter officiated. The happy couple were followed by a host of friends to this happy young couple.

The concert given by the students of Belmont college, Tennessee, Thursday and Friday of the past week deserve more than passing notice. The first was a piano, eloquent and violin recital given last Thursday in the woman's building by Miss Neva Sharon Stewart. It is unusual to find in one young woman such a combination of talent. Her piano playing evinced careful training and thoughtful study and was marked by a finish and proficiency seldom seen in one of her age.

On Friday morning the Misses Nullen gave a recital in the auditorium to a large and appreciative audience. These students played at the world's fair, though very children at that time. They certainly have the promise of a remarkable future before them, for, unlike most gifted children, they are even now careful and thoughtful students. Under the fine training of Miss Kate Lester McCandless, our talented townswomen, they cannot fail to realize the fondest hopes and ambitions of their friends. About fifty of the Belmont students visited the exposition this week, and their charming manners, thoughtful and intelligent faces were the remark of all who met them. They certainly speak volumes for the reputation of this noted college and the admirable management of the Misses Hood and Heron, of Belmont.

Among the most brilliant and beautiful marriages of the season was the elegant home wedding Thursday evening at the stately Peachtree residence of Colonel and Mrs. B. F. Abbott, to which the friends of Miss Josephine King and Mr. Fred A. Carter, of Sweetwater, Tenn., the contracting parties, were invited. Among Atlanta's famous homes none is more palatial, both in decoration and appointment than the beautiful scene of the lovely wedding of Mr. Carter and Miss King, and never has the elaborate carvings, the exquisite decorations, the rich hangings and wealth of bric-a-brac that are part of this home appeared to better advantage than when enhanced and added to by the profusion of potted plants and cut flowers that lent their beauty to the scene on all sides. Graceful palms filled every nook, while tall vases and urns of magnificent chrysanthemums and queenly American Beauty roses met the eye at each turn.

Behind a screen of evergreens and palms in the second hall Wurm's orchestra was concealed, and to the beautiful but solemn strains of Dr. Sturker, of the Central Presbyterian church, proceeded down the grand stairs, through the double drawing rooms to the archedway in the extreme end of the front room. The party, in the order of their entrance, consisted of Miss Julia Geroling, of Atlanta, and Mr. J. L. Hutchinson, of Tennessee; Miss Edie Smith, of Tennessee, and Mr. D. H. Browder, of Atlanta; Miss Durant, of Atlanta, and Mr. Sam Jones, of Atlanta; and Miss May Carter, sister of the groom, an exquisite brunette beauty, as maid of honor, with Mr. W. Graham Anderson as best man.

The fair young bride entered on the arm of the groom, and the impressive words of Sturker, of the Central Presbyterian church, performed the marriage ceremony.

The bride's dress was superb white satin, the gleaming folds of which were softened by the richest of Brussels point lace and the airy lightness of the bridal veil. Magnificent diamonds gleamed in her dark hair and at her neck.

The bride bouquet was of lilies of the valley. The bridesmaids' toilets, two in pink, two in green, were exquisitely dainty and charming of white and black tulle over rich satin, with enormous fluffy satin bows.

Mrs. Laura King, the bride's mother, wore a handsome white and black tulle dress with elegant round point lace, diamonds. After the ceremony the bride and groom were invited into the magnificent dining room, where the table was daintily and beautifully with decorations of masses of pure pink roses and smilax.

Mrs. Carter is the namesake and favorite niece of her aunt, Mrs. Abbott, and in going to her new Tennessee home will leave a vacant place that it will be hard to fill in this home of which she has formed so large a part, as also in the hearts of her many Atlanta friends.

Mr. Carter belongs to an old and prominent Tennessee family, and is a young business man of promise. After a wedding tour to some of the western cities Mr. and Mrs. Carter will make Sweetwater, Tenn., their home.

Society has been put in her finest frills and furbelows to the many delightful receptions, dinners, teas and dances that have made the past few days one continuous round of gaiety. It seems that each week gets just a little gayier than the one before. When the exposition is over and we settle down to two or three parties a week we will think nostalgically of the time when we could not possibly fill all the invitations received.

The large social function of particular importance to the young set was the cotillion given by Miss Cattle Jackson. This not only marked the entrance into society of one of the most beautiful girls in Georgia but also Mrs. Jackson's return to social life again.

This occasion marked another of the many brilliant affairs that the Jacksons have given. They are noted for their royal way of entertaining, which is done after the old southern manner, and their hospitality has been thoroughly appreciated by the people here and elsewhere.

Miss Jackson, who is a high bred aristocratic type of girl, looked perfectly beautiful in a dress of white embroidered museline de soie. She received her guests in a sweet, gracious manner and was assisted by Miss Carrie Johnson, who is one of the prettiest and most popular girls in Atlanta. She looked like a beautiful rose in her dress of soft pink mull and silk.

Mrs. Ruth Cunningham was one of the prettiest girls present, she is not only lovely but is also quite fascinating. She wore a very handsome white satin gown.

Miss Laura Adair is a strikingly pretty girl and has a superb figure. She attracted much attention in an exquisite yellow brocade satin.

Miss Lila Kingsberry looked like a beautiful lily in a gown of white satin.

Miss Margaret Newman, in a white brocade silk, was one of the prettiest and most admired girls in the room.

Mrs. Jackson was extremely pretty and handsome in a gown of black silk trimmed in lace. She makes an ideal hostess, as her manners are sweet and thoughtful of others.

Wilmer Moore never looked prettier and more charming than she did in a dress of white satin.

It would be impossible to mention all the pretty girls and all the pretty dresses, for there were never as lovely a gathering of young people as those that were present at the home of Captain and Mrs. Henry Jackson Wednesday evening.

Miss Josephine Inman's reception to Miss Lucy Inman was one of the most delightful given during the past week. Miss Josephine Inman's dress was of velvet and silk combined in a pretty artistic way. Miss Lucy Inman wore a very elegant gown of American Beauty satin trimmed in point lace.

One of the prettiest dresses worn was that of Miss Lillian Lochrane. It was a charming French creation of silk and velvet. The skirt was of dark green corded velvet and the Louis XIV coat was of white and pink silk. With this costume she wore a white hat covered with white tips.

Mrs. Fred Remington Green, of New York, who received with Miss Inman, wore a black satin skirt and a waist of white satin covered with chiffon and the sleeves were of pale pink velvet.

Miss Carrie Johnson's dancing party to Miss Lila Nelson was another of the social events of the week.

Miss Avis Batts will have as her guest next week Miss Mary Cochran, daughter of Judge R. H. Cochran, of Toledo, O.

Mrs. L. V. Stacy, of New York city, is on a visit to the south and will spend the winter with her son, Mr. L. P. Stacy, at the Alhambra on Peachtree.

Dr. J. P. Thomas left yesterday for Washington.

Miss Adella R. Osmout, daughter of Mr. T. M. Osmout, a prominent lawyer in San Francisco, will arrive in Atlanta on Monday as the guest of Misses Gipsy and Beanie Morris.

Miss Annie Hunt, one of the most charming and attractive young ladies of Newman, is visiting her sister, Mrs. Charles S. Drake, at her home, 157 Gordon street.

Miss Connolly, of Virginia, is the guest of Mrs. Joseph Thompson, at Brookwood. She is one of the greatest belles and beauties of her state, and she has had every advantage that wealth and high position could offer. She is extremely cultivated and widely traveled, and to her naturally fascinating personality is added all the charm which a cosmopolitan existence can bestow.

She is piquant and vivacious in her style, being a slender, willowy brunette, and she is noted for her exquisite dressing as well as her charm of mind and manner. She is receiving a great deal of attention here and a number of elegant entertainments will be given in her honor.

A very lovely reception was given by Mrs. George M. Traylor Saturday afternoon in

'GENE FIELD'S DEATH

Sets Arp to Ruminating on the Uncertainty of Life.

THE YOUNG AND LOVELY DIE

While the Old are Allowed to Remain. Some Reminiscences of Grady. How He Got an Ad.

Oh, what a pity of it; Eugene Field is dead. When everybody loved him, man it does seem hard that he should die. Just in his prime and getting riper, purer, mellower as years rolled on. We of the south had learned to love him for he was gentle and kind to us. He loved Grady and Grady loved him. They were together now somewhere. I wonder how their spirits met and what they said. It is hard on the south to lose two such friends. They were of the same age, lacking a few months. Love, kindness, tenderness of heart, redeeming traits in human nature, and they had them.

I was reading Wallace Reed's pleasant reminiscence of Henry Grady in last Sunday's paper and it carried me back to the old days. Henry, like Fields, was struggling against fate to make his paper a success. The merchants had not then learned the value of advertising, and Henry pleaded in vain for a more liberal patronage. A leading merchant, who claimed to be his friend, stubbornly declined to give him a big ad and said it would be money thrown away, for nobody read them.

"Don't read them!" exclaimed Henry, "don't read them! Well, I will show you." Next morning's paper contained a short editorial on cats and told how cat fur had recently come in great demand in fashionable circles in New York and how the long coarse hairs were eliminated and the real fur was made into lippets and muffs and every fashionable lady wore a fur collar. Not far off in another column was a displayed advertisement that said:

"WANTED—100 cats, for which 50 cents each will be paid."

The merchant's name was signed to it. By noon the cats began to roll in. Small boys and white and black, brought them in baskets and bags. For a while the merchant enjoyed the joke, but soon got tired and went away to dinner. By the time he returned the boys and dandies from the suburbs were coming in and the sidewalk was blocked. Henry had laughed and laughed and laughed and cried at every new arrival of cats. As fast as the merchant drove off one crowd another filled their places. He armed himself with a big stick, but at last he closed his doors in sheer despair and night relieved him from the pressure.

But the next morning the catastrophe was worse. The catalogue was not ended, for the country people had heard the news and brought cats in on their wood wagons and under their buggy seats and tied up in cotton baskets like chickens. Henry took the cats near by and leaned against a telegraph pole for support. He and Shanklin—dear old Shanklin—and the folks who loved fun, were all there and while it was fun to the boys and death to the frogs, it was such a rare and racy joke that the merchant could get mad and finally surrendered. He made an appropriate little speech to the crowd and told Henry that if he would promise never to do him no harm if he would give him the biggest cat he had ever had in his paper, Henry promised and the ad was given. That illustrated the mischief that was in his rollicking nature.

But one evening Henry was sick and left his junior to make up the paper. It was just on the eve of an exciting municipal election and some bitter things had been published and more bitter things had been said. It was feared that some of the contending parties would come to blows. A candidate who had been sorely maligned wrote a bitter denunciation of his opponent and took it to the junior just before the paper went to press. It was received and inserted and printed in about three hundred copies when Henry walked into the office to see what the boys had done in his absence. He read the article and was horror-stricken. "Stop that press!" cried he. "Stop it stop it it would not have that article go in for $1,000. But those men are my personal friends, and they will fight. There will be bloodshed either on the street or in a duel. Both have wives and children and it would be a shame to widen the breach. How many have you struck off?"

"About three hundred," they said. "We get your knives and scissors and we will cut it out of every one and print no more with that bloody press in them." All hands went to work and soon had every paper perforated with a hole 2 1/2 inches, and so they were folded and mailed. The town wondered, but Henry had sworn all hands to secrecy and not more than five of us ever knew what had been done. Out long years after he said to me one day in his Atlanta office, "I believe I saved a man's life that night and it was a good spirit that moved me to get up off a sick bed and go down to overlook the paper."

Henry is dead and Shanklin, whom he loved, and Dwell and John Wiley and I reckon everybody who was connected with his paper is dead and dead. Only his good old Christian mother remains that family. It seems to me that old Father Time ought to take us by our ages and let the young live on. Eugene Field was not even sick and warned. This heart failure is getting alarming. It is a good text for Moody, for nobody is safe nowadays.

There is another of that trio—Grady, Field and Shanklin—dead, all dead and all the same age. Two shall be taken and the other left. May the good Lord spare him till he sees his treasured years and, yes, till the red locks turn to gray. It is a deeper grief for those to die who are in the prime of life and usefulness. A young mother died here the other day who all her life had been a wife and mother, a good daughter, a loving wife, and our hearts full of sympathy went out to the bereaved ones and to the father. The child is there and the father's tears fall on it sometimes, but what is home without a mother? After all that we say about each other the world is full of sympathy and one touch of nature makes us all akin. The sweetest poem that I have ever written was founded upon love and the love of a mother. The Fisher's "Little Boy Blue" is love itself, and even his prose was full of it. That sweet little story of "The Old Maid" will bring welcome tears from eyes unwept to the melting mood. The poems that have lasted the longest and still live in our hearts are not the stately measures of Byron and Shakespeare and Pope, but they are from Leigh Hunt and Coleridge and Goldsmith and Tom Hood and Burns and Jean Ingelow. I was reading "The Fisherman's Prayer" about the other night, and it stopped before I got through, for the little six-year-old grandchild filled up and began to sob like her heart would break. I learned the "The Hermit" when I was young and I love to repeat it now. Halcyon and Bryant are grand. Longfellow is beautiful and Holmes is delightful, but they don't touch deep down like those I have named. Give us the "The Hermit" and the "Song of the Shirt" and the "Caterpillar" and Saturday Night will live as long as our language.

A good heart beats over poor Rip Van Winkle as acted by Joe Jefferson. Burns was in a room where there was a painting of a young mother with a babe in her arms who had just found her husband dead on a battlefield, and underneath the picture were these lines:

"Beneath her babe, her eye dissolved in dew,
Gave the sad story of his future years—
The child long misery beguiled in tears."
Scott says that Burns could not conceal his emotion, but wept like a child. And yet there are folks who fancy the painting of a great battle with all its blood and carnage and misery! A. T. Stewart said $50,000 for one. It is now in the Central park gallery in New York. The one that Burns wept over ought to be right under it as a contrast—an object lesson.

But we are calm and serene in these parts now. There is no war nor pestilence nor any great calamity. The land is filled with plenty and I reckon our people are thankful. The good book says: "When a man's ways please the Lord, He maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him." It does look like our enemies are harmonizing of late more than at any time since the war. There is nobody breathing out threatenings and slaughter against us now except old man Horner and he is almost dead. There was comfort in what Mr. Loomis, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., said when he got back home: "The south has never had a chance since the war. Stripped bare as a bone—no money, no industry, no pensions—it is past reason how she has come to the front. Think of it! The government has since the war paid out in pensions alone $1,500,000,000 that staid in the north. Of this vast sum the south had to pay her part in taxes and got nothing. Just give her $100,000,000 as a starter and in ten years the north would have at her disposal the same vast sum as the south. They are all Americans, through a century of American parenage. It is a refreshing thought to see a whole community of pure Americans."

How is that for a manly confession from a leading business man in the northern publican city. I wish that he and all such would come down here and domicile with us. They can bring their pensions and their money and scatter the money around. So it circulates in the neighborhood of all right. May the Lord keep us humble and happy. BILL ARP.
